voltage² (vōl′tāj), n. [< *volt*² + -age.] Electromotive force reckoned in volts. The voltage of a dynamo under any particular working conditions is the number of volts of electromotive force between its terminals under these conditions.

voltagraphy (vol-tag′ra-fi), n. [Irreg. < volta(ic) + Gr. -γραφία, < γράφειν, write.] The art of copying in metals deposited by electrolytic action any form or pattern which is made the negative surface of a voltaic circuit; copying by electrotypy.

voltaic (vol-tā′ik), a. [< Volta (see def.) + -ic.] Of or pertaining to Alessandro Volta, an Italian physicist (1745–1827), who shares with Galvani the honor of having discovered the means of producing an electric current at the expense of chemical action upon one of two united plates of dissimilar metals. Of the two, however, the higher credit is due to Volta; consequently, voltaic is more commonly used than galvanic.—Poles of a voltaic pile. See *pole*².—Voltaic arc. See *arc*¹, and electric light (under electric).—Voltaic arch. Same as voltaic arc.—Voltaic battery, cell. See battery, 8 (b), and cell, 8 (with cuts).—Voltaic current, an electric current produced by a voltaic battery: sometimes applied to electric currents generally.—Voltaic field, the space surrounding the electrodes or plates in an electrolytic cell during the process of electrolysis.—Voltaic induction. See induction, 6.—Voltaic pencil, a pencil by which etchings are executed by the action of a voltaic arc at its point.—Voltaic pile, a column formed by successive pairs of plates of two dissimilar metals, as zinc and copper, alternating with moistened flannel or pasteboard, in regular order of succession: an early form of chemical battery devised by Volta. See cuts under battery, 8.

Voltairean (vol-tār′ē-an), a. Same as Voltairian.

Voltairian (vol-tār′i-an), a. and n. [< Voltaire + -ian.] I. a. Of or pertaining to Voltaire (François Marie Arouet, who when about 25 years old took the name of Voltaire, said to be an anagram of "Arouet, l. j." (that is, F. le jeune, the younger)), a famous French poet, dramatist, and historian (1694–1778); resembling Voltaire.

> "Say they're levanting, Buchan," said Miller, who liked his joke, and would not have objected to be called Voltairian.
> George Eliot, Daniel Deronda, xlii.

II. n. One who advocates the principles of Voltaire.

Voltairianism (vol-tār′i-an-izm), n. [< Voltairian + -ism.] The Voltairian spirit; the doctrines or philosophy of Voltaire; specifically, the incredulity or skepticism, especially in regard to revealed Christianity, often attributed to Voltaire.

Voltairism (vol-tār'izm), n. [< Voltaire (see def.) + -ism.] The principles or practice of Voltaire; skepticism; infidelity.

In Luther's own country Protestantism soon dwindled into a rather barren affair, . . . the essence of it sceptical contention: which indeed has jangled more and more down to Voltaireism. Carlyle, Heroes, iv.

voltaism (vol'tā-izm), n. [< Volta (see def.) + -ism.] That branch of electrical science which discusses the production of an electric current by the chemical action between dissimilar metals immersed in a liquid. It is so named from the Italian physicist Volta, whose experiments contributed greatly to the establishment of this branch of science. See voltaic.

voltaite (vol'tā-īt), n. [< Volta (see voltaic) + -ite[2].] In mineral., a hydrous sulphate of iron, occurring in isometric crystals of a green to black color: first found at the solfatara near Naples.

★voltameter (vol-tam'e-tėr), n. [Irreg. < volta(ic) + Gr. μέτρον, measure.] An electrolytic cell arranged for quantitative measurement of the amount of decomposition produced by the passage through it of an electric current, and hence used as an indirect means of measuring the strength of the current.

voltametric (vol-ta-met'rik), a. Pertaining to or involving the use of a voltameter: as, voltametric measurement.

volt-ammeter (vōlt'am″e-tėr), n. An instrument which can be used for measuring either volts or amperes. [Obsolete.]

★volt-ampere (vōlt'am-pār″), n. The product of one volt and one ampere, hence, with continuous currents, one watt or the measure of the activity in an electric circuit. With alternating currents one volt-ampere is less than one watt, if the current and the voltage do not alternate simultaneously, but successively.

voltaplast (vol'tā-plāst), n. [< volta(ic) + Gr. πλαστός, verbal adj. of πλάσσειν, mold.] A kind of voltaic battery used in electrotyping.

Volta's pile. See battery, 8 (b).

voltatype (vol'tā-tīp), n. [< volta(ic) + Gr. τύπος, type: see type.] Same as electrotype.

volt-coulomb (vōlt'kö-lom″), n. One volt into one coulomb: equal to one joule with direct current; but it may be less with alternating current. See volt-ampere.

volti (vōl'ti), v. [It., impv. of voltare, turn, < L. volvere, pp. volutus, turn: see volt[1], volve.] In music, same as verte.—Volti subito. See verte subito.

voltiger† (vol'ti-jėr), n. [< F. voltigeur, a leaper: see voltigeur.] Same as voltigeur.

voltigeur (vol-ti-zhėr'), n. [F., < voltiger, < It. volteggiare, vault, < volta, a turn, volt: see volt[1].] 1. A leaper; a vaulter.—2. Formerly, in France, a member of a light-armed picked company, placed on the left of a battalion; under the second empire, a member of one of several special infantry regiments.

voltite (vol'tīt), n. In elect., an insulating material consisting of a mixture of a specially prepared gelatin with resin-oil, oxidized linseed-oil, resin, and paraffin.

Voltmeter.

a, a, connecting-points from which current passes to electromagnets b, b; c, permanent magnet, pivoted at d, connected with pointer e, and held in position at zero by a delicate coiled spring f. When electricity is passed through the electromagnets, the permanent magnet is attracted and drawn around between the poles of the electromagnet a distance which differs according to the strength of the current acting against the resistance of the coiled spring, the pointer indicating on the scale the voltage, or strength, of the current.

★voltmeter (vōlt'-mē″tėr), n. An instrument for measuring the electromotive force or voltage of a circuit. It may be either an electrostatic voltmeter or electrometer (see electrometer) or a high resistance ampere-meter, that is, an ampere-meter containing very many turns of fine wire, so as to measure very small currents, and calibrated so as to read on its scale volts (which by Ohm's law are proportional to the amperes). See voltmeter in the supplement.

volto†, n. [It.: see vault[1].] A vault.

Entring the church, admirable is the bredth of the volto or roofe. Evelyn, Diary, Nov. 19, 1644.

Voltolini's disease. A disease of childhood, characterized by cerebral symptoms, and followed by permanent deafness.

Voltzia (volt'si-ä), n. [NL., named after P. L. Voltz (1785–1840), a French mining engineer.] The generic name given by Brongniart (1828) to a fossil plant which first appeared in the Permian, and found also, in several localities, in the various divisions of the European Trias, and in rocks of the same age in India. Voltzia belongs to the Pinaceæ, and probably to the Taxodieæ. It is a tree of considerable height, resembling Araucaria in general appearance, but having a fructification analogous to that of the Taxodieæ. V. Liebeana occurs in the Permian, V. heterophylla in the Buntersandstein, V. Recubariensis in the Muschelkalk, and V. Coburgensis in the Keuper.

voltzine (volt'sin), n. [< Voltz (see Voltzia) + -ine[2].] A rose-red, yellowish, or brownish opaque or subtranslucent mineral, occurring in implanted spherical globules with thin lamellar structure. It is an oxysulphid of zinc.

volubilate (vol'ū-bi-lāt), a. [< L. volubilis, turning (see voluble) + -ate[1].] In bot., twining; voluble.

volubile (vol'ū-bil), a. [Formerly also volubil; < L. volubilis, whirling, that is turned round: see voluble.] 1†. Same as voluble, 1.

This less volubil earth,
By shorter flight to the east, had left him there.
Milton, P. L., iv. 594.

2. In bot., same as voluble, 4. Encyc. Brit., ★IV. 95.

volubility (vol-ū-bil'i-ti), n. [< F. volubilité, < L. volubilita(t-)s, a rapid whirling motion, fluency (of speech), < volubilis, whirling, voluble: see voluble.] 1. The state or character of being voluble in speech; excessive fluency or readiness in speaking; unchecked flow of talk.

A lacquey that runs on errands for him, and can whisper a light message to a loose wench with some round volubility. B. Jonson, Cynthia's Revels, i. 1.

He [the emperor] first attacked Cardinal Fesch, and, singularly enough, launched forth with uncommon volubility into a discussion on ecclesiastical principles and usages, without possessing the slightest notion, either historical or theological, of the subject.
Memoirs of Talleyrand, in The Century, XLI. 701.

2. A rolling or revolving; aptness to roll; revolution; hence, mutability.

Then celestial spheres should forget their wonted motions, and by irregular volubility turn themselves any way, as it might happen. Hooker.

voluble (vol'ū-bl), a. [< F. voluble = Sp. voluble = Pg. voluvel = It. volubile, < L. volubilis, that turns around, whirling, fluent (of speech), < volvere, pp. volutus, turn round or about: see volve.] 1. Formed so as to roll with ease, or to be easily turned or set in motion; apt to roll; rolling; rotating; revolving.

The most excellent of all the figures Geometrical is the round for his many perfections. First because he is euen and smooth, without any angle or interruption, most voluble and apt to turne, and to continue motion, which is the author of life. Puttenham, Arte of Eng. Poesie, p. 81.

Yeares, like a ball, are voluble, and run;
Houres, like false Vowes, no sooner spoke than done.
Heywood, Dialogues (Works, ed. Pearson, 1874, VI. 141).

Would you like to hear yesterday's sermon over and over again—eternally voluble? Thackeray, Philip, xvii.

2. Characterized by a great flow of words or by glibness of utterance; speaking with plausible fluency: as, a voluble politician.

Cassio, . . . a knave very voluble.
Shak., Othello, ii. 1. 242.

A man's tongue is voluble, and pours
Words out of all sorts ev'ry way. Such as you speak you hear. Chapman, Iliad, xx. 228.

If a man hath a voluble Tongue, we say, He hath the gift of Prayer. Selden, Table-Talk, p. 90.

[Formerly it might be used of readiness and ease in speaking without the notion of excess.

It [speech] ought to be voluble vpon the tongue, and tunable to the eare.
Puttenham, Arte of Eng. Poesie (ed. Arber), p. 168.

He [Archbishop Abbot] was painful, stout, severe against bad manners, of a grave and voluble eloquence.
Bp. Hacket, Abp. Williams, i. 65. (Trench.)]

3†. Changeable; mutable.

He . . . almost puts Faith in a fever, and deifies alone
Voluble chance.
Fletcher (and another), Two Noble Kinsmen, i. 2.

4. In bot., of a twining habit; rising spirally around a support, as the hop.

volubleness (vol'ū-bl-nes), n. The character of being voluble; volubility.

volubly (vol'ū-bli), adv. In a voluble or fluent manner.

"O Gods," said he, "how volubly doth talk
This eating gulf!" Chapman, Odyssey, xviii. 41.

Fallacies which, when set down on paper, are at once detected, pass for unanswerable arguments when dexterously and volubly urged in Parliament, at the bar, or in private conversation. Macaulay, History.

Volucella (vol-ū-sel'ä), n. [NL. (Geoffroy, 1764), < L. volucris, fitted for flight: see Volucres.] A notable genus of syrphid flies, some of them mimicking bumblebees in general appearance, and scavengers, in the larval state, in the nests of these bees and in the nests of wasps. Forty-five species are known in North America, and seven in Europe.

Volucres (vol'ū-krēz), n. pl. [NL., < L. volucer or volucris, fitted for flight, winged, volitorial; as a noun, a bird; < volare, fly: see volant.] 1. In C. L. Bonaparte's classification of birds (1850), the first tribe of the third order of Passeres, embracing those lower Passeres which form Sundevall's scutelliplantar division of that order, together with all the picarian birds. It is an artificial group, insusceptible of definition, and corresponds exactly with no recognized group or groups; on the whole it agrees best with Picariæ as commonly accepted.

2. In C. J. Sundevall's classification, the second order of birds, agreeing in the main with the Picariæ as commonly understood, but including the parrots and pigeons. It is most nearly a synonym of the old Picæ of Linnæus. [Rare in both senses.]

volucrine (vol'ū-krin), a. [< L. volucris, a bird, + -ine[1].] Pertaining to birds; bird-like.

The volucrine clamor continued unabated, and when I came downstairs I was not surprised at the sight that awaited me. The passage was filled with bird-cages.
P. Robinson, Under the Sun, p. 349.

★volume (vol'ūm), n. [< F. volume = Sp. volumen = Pg. It. volume, < L. volumen (volumin-), a roll (as of a manuscript), < volvere, pp. volutus, roll round or about: see voluble.] 1. A written document (as of parchment, papyrus, or strips of bark) rolled up in a convenient form for keeping or use, such being anciently the prevailing form of the book; a roll; a scroll.

Volume of the ancient type.
Pentateuch of the Samaritans, used in their Synagogue at Shechem.

The written sheets were usually wound around a stick, termed an umbilicus, the extremities of which were called the cornua, to which a label containing the name of the author was tied. The whole was placed in a wrapper, and frequently anointed with oil of cedarwood as a preservative against insects.

In the volume [roll, R. V.] of the book it is written.
Heb. x. 7.

In history a great volume is unrolled for our instruction. Burke, Rev. in France.

Hence—2. A collection of written or printed sheets bound together, whether containing a single complete work, a part of a work, or more than one separate work; a book; a tome: as, a large volume; a work in six volumes.

He furnish'd me
From mine own library with volumes.
Shak., Tempest, i. 2. 167.

They [men] cannot extinguish those lively characters of the power, wisdom, and goodness of God which are every where to be seen in the large volume of the Creation.
Stillingfleet, Sermons, I. iii.

An odd volume of a set of books bears not the value of its proportion to the set. Franklin.

Luther's works were published at Wittemberg in Latin and German, in nineteen volumes, large folio, and at Jena in twelve. Burney, Hist. Music, III. 39, note.

3. Something of a roll-like, rounded, or swelling form; a rounded mass; a coil; a convolution; a wreath; a fold: as, volumes of smoke.

Hid in the spiry Volumes of the Snake,
I lurk'd within the Covert of a Brake.
Dryden, State of Innocence, iv. 2.

Thames's fruitful tides
Slow through the vale in silver volumes play.
Fenton, Ode to John, Lord Gower, st. 3.

4. An amount or measure of tridimensional space; solid contents; hence, an amount or aggregated quantity of any kind.

An enormous log glowing and blazing, and sending forth a vast volume of light and heat.
Irving, Sketch-Book, p. 246.

The judge's volume of muscle could hardly be the same as the colonel's; there was undoubtedly less beef in him.
Hawthorne, Seven Gables, viii.

Railroad men have found out . . . that so small a matter apparently as the civility or neglect of conductors, or the scarcity or abundance of towels on sleeping-cars, will sensibly influence the volume of travel.
D. A. Wells, Our Merchant Marine, p. 112.

Very probably these recent climatic changes, both marine and terrestrial, in the North Atlantic region, have been due in large measure to variations in the volume of the Gulf Stream. Amer. Jour. Sci., 3d ser., XLI. 42.

5. In music, quantity, fullness, or roundness of tone or sound.—Atomic volume. See atomic.—Specific steam-volume. See steam.—Specific volume, the quotient of the molecular weight of a compound body by its specific gravity. In the case of a liquid the specific gravity is taken at the boiling-point.—To speak or tell volumes, to be full of meaning; be very significant.

The epithet, so often heard, and in such kindly tones, of "poor Goldsmith" speaks volumes.
Irving, Oliver Goldsmith, xlv.

Volume-integral. See integral.=Syn. 4. Bulk, Magnitude, etc. See size[1].

volume (vol'ūm), v. i.; pret. and pp. volumed, ppr. voluming. [< volume, n.] To swell; rise in bulk or volume.

The mighty stream which volumes high
From their proud nostrils burns the very air.
Byron, Deformed Transformed, i. 1.

volumed (vol'ūmd), a. [< volume + -ed[2].] 1. Having a rounded form; forming volumes or rolling masses; consisting of rounded masses.

With volumed smoke that slowly grew
To one white sky of sulphurous hue.
Byron, Siege of Corinth, vi.

2. Having volume or volumes (of a specified amount or number).

★volumenometer (vol″ū-me-nom'e-tėr), n. [Irreg. < L. volumen, a volume, + Gr. μέτρον, measure.] An instrument for measuring the volume of a solid body by the quantity of a liquid or of air which it displaces, and thence also for determining its specific gravity.

volumenometry (vol″ū-me-nom'e-tri), n. [As volumenometer + -y[3].] The art of determining by displacement the volumes of solid bodies, or the spaces occupied by them; stereometry.

volumetric (vol-ū-met'rik), a. [Irreg. < L. volu(men), volume, + Gr. μετρικός, < μέτρον, measure.] In chem. and physics, pertaining to or noting measurements by volume, as of gases or liquids: opposed to gravimetric.

It is possible in this way to determine quickly by a volumetric process even so little as one-fourth per cent. of alcohol in a mixture. Ure, Dict., IV. 39.

Mosso's volumetric measurements indicated that in hypnotic catalepsy there was slightly more blood in the left arm. Mind, IX. 96.

Volumetric analysis. Same as titration.

volumetrical (vol-ū-met'ri-kal), a. [< volumetric + -al.] Same as volumetric.

The amount of metallic iron and its condition of oxidation in the ore were determined by Margueritte's volumetrical method. Campin, Mech. Engineering, p. 397.

volumetrically (vol-ū-met'ri-kal-i), adv. [< volumetrical + -ly[2].] By volumetric analysis.

voluminal (vō-lū'mi-nal), a. [< L. volumen (-min-), volume, + -al.] Pertaining to volume or cubical contents: as, voluminal expansion.

voluminosity (vō-lū-mi-nos'i-ti), n. [< voluminous + -ity.] The quality or state of being voluminous; copiousness; prolixity.

The later writings [of H. Müller-Stübing] have gone on with bewildering voluminosity.
Amer. Jour. Philol., VIII. 117.

voluminous (vō-lū'mi-nus), a. [< F. volumineux = Sp. Pg. It. voluminoso, < LL. voluminosus, full of windings, bendings, or folds, < L. volumen, a roll, fold: see volume.] 1†. Consisting of coils or convolutions.

Woman to the waist, and fair,
But ended foul in many a scaly fold
Voluminous and vast. Milton, P. L., ii. 652.

2. Of great volume or bulk; large; swelling: literally or figuratively.

Why, though I seem of a prodigious waist,
I am not so voluminous and vast
But there are lines wherewith I might be embraced.
B. Jonson, Underwoods, lxxi.

It was essential that a gentleman's chin should be well propped, that his collar should have a voluminous roll.
George Eliot, Felix Holt, xvi.

We call the reverberations of a thunder-storm more voluminous than the squeaking of a slate pencil.
W. James, Mind, XII. 1.

3. Having written much; producing many or bulky books; also, copious; diffuse; prolix: as, a voluminous writer.

He did not bear contradiction without much passion, and was too voluminous in discourse. Clarendon.

4. Being in many volumes; hence, copious enough to make numerous volumes: used of the published writings of an author: as, the voluminous works of Sir Walter Scott.

voluminously (vō-lū'mi-nus-li), adv. In a voluminous manner; in large quantity; copiously; diffusely.

The doctor voluminously rejoined.
Swift, Battle of the Books.

voluminousness (vō-lū'mi-nus-nes), n. 1†. The state of being in coils or convolutions.

Solid bones crushed by the infinite stress
Of the snake's adamantine voluminousness.
Shelley, A Vision of the Sea.

2. Copiousness; diffuseness.

His [Aquinas's] works mount to that voluminousness they have very much by repetitions.
Dodwell, Letters of Advice, ii.

3. The state of being voluminous or bulky.

The reader will have noticed, in this enumeration of facts, that voluminousness of the feeling seems to bear very little relation to the size of the organ that yields it.
W. James, Prin. of Psychol., II. 140.

volumist† (vol'ū-mist), n. [< volume + -ist.] One who writes a volume; an author. [Rare.]

Yee write them in your closets, and unwrite them in your Courts, hot Volumists and cold Bishops.
Milton, On Def. of Humb. Remonst.

voluntarily (vol'un-tā-ri-li), adv. [< ME. voluntarily; < voluntary + -ly[2].] In a voluntary manner; of one's own motion; without being moved, influenced, or impelled by others; spontaneously; freely.

When that Gaffray had all thes thynges said,
Raymounde hertly glade reioyng that braide,
That Gaffray gan hire voluntarily.
Rom. of Partenay (E. E. T. S.), l. 5055.

At last died, not by his enemies command, but voluntarily in his olde age. Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 322.

And the faculty of voluntarily bringing back a wandering attention over and over again is the very root of judgment, character, and will.
W. James, Prin. of Psychol., I. 424.

voluntariness (vol'un-tā-ri-nes), n. The state of being voluntary, or endowed with the power of willing, choosing, or determining; the state or character of being produced voluntarily.

The voluntariness of an action.
Hammond, Works, I. 234.

voluntarious† (vol-un-tā'ri-us), a. [< L. voluntarius, voluntary: see voluntary.] Voluntary; free.

Men of voluntarious wil withsitte that heuens gouerneth.
Testament of Love, ii.

voluntariously† (vol-un-tā'ri-us-li), adv. Voluntarily; willingly.

Most pleasantly and voluntariously to bear the yoke of his most comfortable commandments.
Strype, Eccles. Mem., Edw. VI., an. 1550.

voluntary (vol'un-tā-ri), a. and n. [< ME. voluntarie*, < OF. (and F.) volontaire = Sp. Pg. It. voluntario, < L. voluntarius, willing, of free will, < volunta(t-)s, will, choice, desire, < volun(t-)s, volen(t-)s, ppr. of velle, will: see volition, will.] I. a. 1. Proceeding from the will; done of or due to one's own accord or free choice; unconstrained by external interference, force, or influence; not compelled, prompted, or suggested by another; spontaneous; of one's or its own accord; free.

The third sort of ignorance is the worst; it is that which is vincible and voluntary.
Jer. Taylor, Rule of Conscience, IV. i. 6.

Voluntary works be called all manner of offering in the church, except your offering days and your tithes.
Latimer, Misc. Sel.

The lottery of my destiny
Bars me the right of voluntary choosing.
Shak., M. of V., ii. 1. 16.

The true Charity of Christians is a free and voluntary thing, not what men are forced to do by the Laws.
Stillingfleet, Sermons, II. vii.

I have made myself the voluntary slave of all.
Goldsmith, Good-natured Man, v.

Very little time was allowed between the accusation, condemnation, and death of a suspected witch; and if a voluntary confession was wanting, they never failed extorting a forced one by tormenting the suspected person.
Gifford, Int. to Ford's Plays, p. xxiv.

2. Subject to or controlled by the will; regulated by the will: as, the movement of a limb is voluntary, the action of the heart involuntary.

We always explain the voluntary action of all men except ourselves on the principle of causation by character and circumstances. H. Sidgwick, Methods of Ethics, p. 48.

It follows from this that voluntary movements must be secondary, not primary functions of our organism.
W. James, Prin. of Psychol., II. 487.

We see here that atrophy begins in the most voluntary limb, the arm. Pop. Sci. Mo., XXV. 174.

3. Done by design or intention; intentional; purposed; not accidental.

Giving myself a voluntary wound.
Shak., J. C., ii. 1. 300.

If a man be lopping a tree, and his ax-head fall from the helve, . . . and kills another passing by, here is indeed manslaughter, but no voluntary murther.
Perkins. (Johnson.)

4. Endowed with the power of willing, or acting of one's own free will or choice, or according to one's judgment.

God did not work as a necessary, but a voluntary agent, intending beforehand, and decreeing with himself, that which did outwardly proceed from him.
Hooker, Eccles. Polity, I. iii. 2.

5. Of, pertaining, or relating to voluntaryism, or the doctrines of the voluntaries: as, the voluntary theory or controversy.—6. In law: (a) Proceeding from the free and unconstrained will of the person: as, a voluntary confession. (b) Not supported by a substantial pecuniary or valuable consideration. See voluntary conveyance, below.—Voluntary affidavit or oath. (a) An affidavit or oath made in a case in which the law has not sanctioned the administration of an oath or affirmation. (b) An affidavit offered spontaneously or made freely, without the compulsion of subpœna or other process.—Voluntary agent. See agent.—Voluntary appearance, the spontaneous appearance of a defendant for the purpose of resisting an action or other proceeding without having been served with process, or without requiring the plaintiff to rely upon service of process to compel appearance.—Voluntary association. See association.—Voluntary bankruptcy. See bankruptcy.—Voluntary conveyance, a conveyance made without valuable consideration; a conveyance in the nature of a gift. The importance of the distinction between this and a conveyance for value is that the former may be voidable by creditors in some cases where the latter may not.—Voluntary escape. See escape, 3.—Voluntary grantee, the grantee in a voluntary conveyance.—Voluntary jurisdiction, a jurisdiction exercised in matters admitting of no opposition or question, and therefore cognizable by any of the court judges, and in any place and on any lawful day.—Voluntary manslaughter. See manslaughter, 2.—Voluntary motion. See motion.—Voluntary muscle, voluntary muscular fiber, striated red muscular fiber (except that of the heart), as distinguished from smooth pale muscular fiber: so called as being under the control of the will. See cut under muscular.—Voluntary partition, a partition accomplished by mutual agreement, as distinguished from one had by the judgment of a court.—Voluntary school, in England, one of a class of elementary schools formerly supported by voluntary subscriptions, many of them in part maintained and regulated by religious bodies. The number of those schools has been greatly reduced since 1870, when education was made compulsory by the Education Act and board schools were established, but they register over 2,000,000 scholars. Council and voluntary schools are now equally controlled by the education committees and (except in regard to the erection and maintenance of premises) share equally in the public funds.—Voluntary waste, waste which is the result of the voluntary act of the tenant of property, as where, without the consent of the proprietor, he cuts down timber, or pulls down a wall.=Syn. Voluntary, Spontaneous, Willing. Voluntary supposes volition, and therefore intention, and presumably reflection. Spontaneous views the act as though there were immediate connection between it and the cause, without intervention of the reason and the will: spontaneous applause seems to start of itself. Willing has in the authorized version of the Bible a range of meaning up to desirous or anxious, as in Mat. i. 19, xxvi. 41, Luke x. 29, but now is strictly confined to the negative sense of consenting, or not refusing or objecting, in regard to the wish of another.

Some of the pleasantest recollections of my childhood are connected with the voluntary study of an ancient Bible which belonged to my grandmother.
Huxley, Critiques and Addresses, p. 54.

Spontaneous joys, where nature has its play,
The soul adopts, and owns their first-born sway.
Goldsmith, Des. Vil., l. 255.

He lent a willing ear to the artful propositions of Sforza.
Prescott, Ferd. and Isa., ii. 1.

II. n.; pl. voluntaries (-riz). 1. One who engages in any affair of his own choice or free will; a volunteer.

Rash, inconsiderate, fiery voluntaries,
With ladies' faces and fierce dragons' spleens.
Shak., K. John, ii. 1. 67.

Specifically— 2. Eccles., in Great Britain, one who maintains the doctrine of the mutual independence of the church and the state, and holds that the church should be supported by the voluntary contributions of its members and should be left entirely free to regulate its affairs.— 3. Any work or performance not imposed by another.

At school he [Wordsworth] wrote some task-verses on subjects imposed by the master, and also some voluntaries of his own, equally undistinguished by any peculiar merit. Lowell, Among my Books, 2d ser., p. 206.

4. In church music, an organ prelude to a service; sometimes, by extension, an interlude or postlude; also, an anthem or other piece of choir-music, especially at the opening of a service. These uses of the word seem to have originated in the fact that such musical exercises are not rubrically prescribed.

The rich may indulge in superfluities. The Ionian muse is somewhat too fond of playing voluntaries.
Landor, Imag. Conv., Virgilius and Horatius.

My dear Herr Capellmeister, they say you play the most exquisite voluntaries! Now do play us one.
Longfellow, Hyperion, iv. 4.

At voluntary†, voluntarily; by an effort of will.

Cyrces cuppes were too strong for all antidotes, and womens flatteries too forceable to resist at voluntarie.
Greene, Never Too Late (Works, ed. Dyce, Int., p. xii.).

voluntary† (vol'un-tā-ri), adv. [< voluntary, a.] Voluntarily.

Gold, amber, yvorie, perles, owches, rings,
And all that els was pretious and deare,
The sea unto him voluntary brings.
Spenser, F. Q., III. iv. 23.

I serve here voluntary. Shak., T. and C., ii. 1. 103.

voluntaryism (vol'un-tā-ri-izm), n. [< voluntary + -ism.] Voluntary principle or action; the system or principle of supporting anything by voluntary contribution or assistance; especially, the principle of unrestricted personal liberty in matters of religion—this involving on the one hand the obligation of church-members to support and maintain religious ordinances, and on the other the church's entire freedom from state patronage, support, and control.

Esther . . . was unable at present to give her mind to the original functions of a bishop, or the comparative merits of Endowments and Voluntaryism.
George Eliot, Felix Holt, xli.

The transatlantic friend of Vane, at the very nick of time, was the central champion in England of absolute voluntaryism, against the Independents and the famous fifteen proposals for a State Church on their sort of "Christian Fundamentals." N. A. Rev., CXXVI. 541.

In education, voluntaryism has been most prominent and most beneficent from early times.
Jour. of Education, XVIII. 148.

voluntaryist (vol'un-tā-ri-ist), n. [< voluntary + -ist.] One who believes in or advocates voluntaryism, especially in religion. [Rare.]

We commend this tribute to the Church of England to our friends on the other side of the water, as proof that an American and a Voluntaryist can yet do full justice to that ancient and historical church.
New York Evangelist, Oct. 19, 1876.

voluntative (vol'un-tā-tiv), a. [< L. volunta(t-)s, will, + -ive.] Voluntary.

The simple solution seems to be that the conditioning of a purpose destroys its absolute voluntative power.
Amer. Jour. Philol., IV. 425

voluntet†, n. See volunty.

volunteer (vol-un-tēr'), n. and a. [< F. volontaire, now volontaire = Sp. Pg. It. voluntario, < L. voluntarius, voluntary: see voluntary.] I. n. 1. A person who enters into any service of his own free will.

He has had Compassion upon Lovers, and generously engag'd a Volunteer in this Action, for our Service.
Congreve, Way of the World, v. 14.

2. A person who enters military service of his own free will, and not by constraint or compulsion; one who offers to serve, and generally receives some consideration or privileges on that account; in the United States, especially during the civil war, a soldier of a body other than the regular army, but practically governed by the same laws when in service. In Great Britain the first large force was organized in the 18th century. By the Volunteer Act (1863) they could be called out in case of apprehended invasion, and in 1871 were placed under the War Office. After the South African War, when many thousands served with the regular army, the force was organized (1907–8) with the yeomanry into the new territorial force. In the United States the army of volunteers comprises, to all intents and purposes—(1) the regular unpaid forces of State militia which, when called into the actual service of the United States, receive pay from the government, and are subject to the rules and articles of war, and (2) that class of troops which may from time to time be raised by Congress on occasions of national emergency. Such troops are properly United States troops, and the method of officering them is designated by Congress.

At the very outset of the campaign, the inexperience of the Federal volunteers was made evident, even more on the march than on the battle-field.
Comte de Paris, Civil War in America (trans.), I. 193.

Volunteers often complain that they are not taken seriously enough. . . . Nor must they ever cease complaining until they have been thoroughly organized for whatever their duties are to be, and until those duties are perfectly clear to themselves and the country at large.
Fortnightly Rev., N. S., XLIII. 615.

3. In law, one who claims the benefit of a contract or conveyance although no consideration proceeded from him nor from any one in whose place he stands.— 4. A tree which grows spontaneously: as, that pear-tree in my garden is a volunteer. [Southern U. S.]

II. a. 1. Entering into military service by free will and choice: as, a volunteer soldier.— 2. Composed of volunteers: as, a volunteer corps.

The volunteer artillery, furnished by the several States, was only organized into batteries, having no officer above the rank of captain.
Comte de Paris, Civil War in America (trans.), I. 275.

volunteer (vol-un-tēr'), v. [< volunteer, n.] I. trans. To offer, contribute, or bestow voluntarily, or without constraint or compulsion.

The chief agents who had already volunteered their services against him.
Gifford, Note on B. Jonson's Poetaster, iii. 1.

Bit by bit, the full and true
Particulars of the tale were volunteered
With all the breathless zeal of friendship.
Browning, Ring and Book, I. 232.

II. intrans. To enter into any service of one's free will, without constraint or compulsion: as, to volunteer for a campaign.

volunteerly† (vol-un-tēr'li), adv. Voluntarily; as a volunteer.

Volunteerly to ramble with Lord Loudon Campbell, Brave Ilay did suffer for a'.
Battle of Sheriff-Muir (Child's Ballads, VII. 158).

voluntomotory (vol"un-tō-mō'tō-ri), a. [< volunt(ary) + motory.] Having or pertaining to motor influence or effect which is voluntary, or subject to the will: with Remak specifying the somatopleural division of the body, including the muscular system of ordinary language, as distinguished from the splanchnopleural or involuntomotory (which see).

The volunto-motory, corresponding to the body-wall or somatopleure. Encyc. Brit., VIII. 167.

volunty†, n. [< ME. volunte, also volente, voulente, < OF. volente, volunte, F. volonté = Sp. voluntad = It. voluntà, will, < L. volunta(t-)s, will, desire: see voluntary.] Will; wish; will and pleasure.

For that he May not fulfille his volunte.
Rom. of the Rose, l. 5276.

For of free choice and hertely volente,
She hathe to God avowed chastité.
Lydgate, MS. Ashmole 339, f. 15. (Halliwell.)

After me made by thy will and volente
To take this woman of the fayry,
This here diffamed serpent vnto se.
Rom. of Partenay (E. E. T. S.), l. 3473.

"Sir," quod thei, "yef it be not thus, doth with vs youre volente" Merlin (E. E. T. S.), i. 29.

And the seid Tuddenham and Heydon wold after theyr voulente have it hald yn meen of the maner of Hetersete, vhych sufficient evidenses that ye have specifyeth no thyng soo. Paston Letters, I. 173.

voluperet†, n. [ME., also volupeer, voleper.] A cap or head-dress worn in the fourteenth century by either sex.

The tapes of hir white voluper
Were of the same suyte of hir coler.
Chaucer, Miller's Tale, l. 55.

voluptiet†, n. See volupty.

voluptuary (vō-lup'tū-ā-ri), a. and n. [= F. voluptuaire = It. voluttuario, < L. voluptuarius, for earlier voluptarius, of or pertaining to pleasure, < volupta(t-)s, enjoyment, delight: see voluptuous.] I. a. 1. Pertaining or contributing to luxury and sensual pleasure; promoting sensual indulgence.

The arts which flourish in times while virtue is in growth are military, and while virtue is in state are liberal, and while virtue is in declination are voluptuary.
Bacon, Advancement of Learning, ii.

The works of the voluptuary arts are properly attributed to Vulcan, the God of Fire.
Bacon, Physical Fables, ii., Expl.

2. Given to sensual indulgence; voluptuous: as, voluptuary habits.

II. n.; pl. voluptuaries (-riz). A man given up to luxury or the gratification of the appetite and other sensual indulgences; a sensualist.

Does not the voluptuary understand, in all the liberties of a loose and lewd conversation, that he runs the risk of body and soul? Sir R. L'Estrange.

The parable was intended against the voluptuaries of that time, . . . men who, notwithstanding they professed themselves Jews, lived like Heathens.
Bp. Atterbury, Sermons, I. xii.

We have the Voluptuary, when first pleasant feelings, and secondly the pleasantness of pleasant feelings, are made the end to which all else is means, and the abstraction of pleasure's sake is pursued.
F. H. Bradley, Ethical Studies, p. 253, note.

voluptuatet† (vō-lup'tū-āt), v. t. [< L. voluptu(ous) + *-ate*2.] To make luxurious or delightful.

'Tis watching and labour that voluptuates repose and sleep. Feltham, Resolves, ii. 44.

voluptuosity† (vō-lup-tū-os'i-ti), n. [< voluptuous + -ity.] Voluptuousness.

In some children nature is more prone to vice than to vertue, and in the tender wittes be sparkes of voluptuositie. Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, i. 6.

voluptuous (vō-lup'tū-us), a. [< ME. voluptuous, < OF. voluptuous*, F. voluptueux = Sp. Pg. voluptuoso = It. voluttuoso, < L. voluptuosus, full of gratification, delightful, < volupta(t-)s, pleasure; see volupty.] 1. Pertaining to, proceeding from, or inclined to sensual gratification: as, voluptuous tastes or habits.— 2. Passed or spent in luxury or sensuality.

Soften'd with pleasure and voluptuous life.
Milton, S. A., l. 534.

3. Contributing to sensual pleasure; exciting, or tending to excite, sensual desires and indulgence; sensual.

He that is temperate fleeth pleasures voluptuous.
Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, iii. 20.

Voluptuous idleness. Holland, tr. of Pliny, xix. 4.

Ah, Vice! how soft are thy voluptuous ways!
Byron, Childe Harold, i. 65.

Barbara Palmer, Duchess of Cleveland, was there, no longer young, but still retaining some traces of that superb and voluptuous loveliness which twenty years before overcame the hearts of all men. Macaulay, Hist. Eng., iv.

The face voluptuous, yet pure; funeste, but innocent.
J. S. Fanu, Tenants of Mallory, i.

Low voluptuous music winding.
Tennyson, Vision of Sin, ii.

4. Given to the enjoyments of luxury and pleasure; indulging in sensual gratifications.

Thou wilt bring me soon
. . . where I shall reign
At thy right hand voluptuous, as beseems Thy daughter and thy darling, without end.
Milton, P. L., ii. 869.

Jolly and voluptuous livers.
Bp. Atterbury, Sermons, IV. iv.

=Syn. Carnal, Sensuous, etc. See sensual.

voluptuously (vō-lup'tū-us-li), adv. In a voluptuous manner; with free indulgence in sensual pleasures; luxuriously; sensually: as, to live voluptuously.

Voluptuously surfeit out of action. Shak., Cor., i. 3. 27.

voluptuousness (vō-lup'tū-us-nes), n. The state or character of being voluptuous, or addicted to the pursuit of pleasure and sensual gratification; luxuriousness.

But there 's no bottom, none,
In my voluptuousness; your wives, your daughters,
Your matrons, and your maids could not fill up
The cistern of my lust. Shak., Macbeth, iv. 3. 61.

The voluptuousness of holding a human being in his [the slave-owner's] absolute control.
Emerson, West Indian Emancipation.

To the north-east, in places, the backs and sides of the mountains have a green, pastoral voluptuousness, so smooth and full are they with thick turf.
The Century, XXIV. 421.

volupty†, n. [Early mod. E. also voluptie; < OF. volupte, F. volupté = Pr. voluptat = It. voluptà, voluttà, < L. volupta(t-)s, enjoyment, delight.] Voluptuousness. Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, iii. 20.

Voluspa (vol-us-pä'), n. [< Icel. Völuspá, the song of the sibyl, < völu, gen. of völva, also völfa (pl. völur), a prophetess, sibyl, wise woman, + spá, prophesy, also pry, look, > Sc. spae: see spae, and cf. spaewife.] 1. The name (literally, 'the Prophecy of the Sibyl') of a poem of the Elder Edda.—2. [l. c.] Erroneously, a Scandinavian prophetess or sibyl.

Here seated, the voluspa or sibyl was to listen to the rhymical inquiries which should be made to her, and to return an extemporaneous answer. Scott, Pirate, xxi.

Voluta (vō-lū′tä), n. [NL. (Linnæus, 1758), < L. voluta, a spiral, volute: see volute.] 1. The typical genus of Volutidæ, used with various restrictions, now containing oviparous volutes with a short spire, large aperture, and long first columellar fold, as V. imperialis. See volute, 2, and Volutidæ (with cuts).—2. In arch., same as volute. Evelyn, Architects and Architecture.

Imperial Volute (Voluta imperialis).

Volutacea (vol-ū-tā′sē-ä), n. pl. [NL., < Voluta + -acea.] A group of gastropods; the volutes. See Volutidæ.

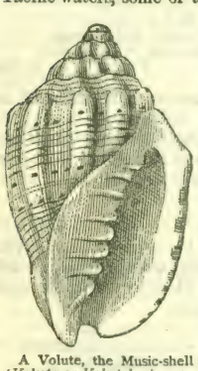
volutation† (vol-ū-tā′shon), n. [< L. volutatio(n-), a rolling about, a wallowing, < volutare, freq. of volvere, roll: see volute.] 1. A wallowing; a rolling, as of the body on the earth.—2. A compound circular motion consisting of a rotation of a body about an axis through its center combined with a revolution about a distant axis.



In the sea, when the storm is over, there remains still an inward working and volutation. Bp. Reynolds, The Passions, xxi.

volute (vō-lūt′), n. and a. [< F. volute = Sp. Pg. It. voluta, < L. voluta, a spiral scroll, a volute, < volvere, pp. volutus, turn round or about, roll, = E. wallow[1].] I. n. 1. In arch., a spiral scroll forming an essential part of the Ionic, Corinthian, and Composite capitals, of which it is a characteristic ornament. The number of volutes in the Greek Ionic capital is four, two each on opposite faces. In the Corinthian and Composite orders they are more numerous, in the former order being sixteen in number. See helix, 2 (with cut), and cuts under Acanthus, Corinthian, Ionic, and composite. Also voluta.

Volutes.—1. Greek Ionic: Temple of Artemis, Ephesus. 2. Composite (Roman): Baths of Caracalla, Rome.

2. In conch.: (a) The member of the Volutidæ. The volutes are chiefly tropical shells, especially of Indo-Pacific waters, some of them of great rarity and beauty, and highly prized by collectors, as V. imperialis, the imperial volute, which shows beautiful sculpture and tracery, and has a circlet of spines like a diadem crowning the very large body-whorl (see cut under Voluta). The peacock-tail volute, Voluta (or Scaphella) junonia, of quite another form, is white with orange spots, and was long considered one of the rarest of shells, bringing a very high price. Many of the volutes being well known, they take more distinctive names. Such is the West Indian music-shell, Voluta musica, so called because the markings resemble written music. This species, unlike most volutes, is operculate, and is placed by some authors in another genus, Volutolyria or Musica. Some volutes are known as bat-shells, as V. vespertilio; others as yets or boat-shells and melon-shells (see cuts under Cymbium and Melo); and some forms, as Cymbium, are oviparous. See also cut under Volutidæ. (b) A volution or whorl of a spiral shell.—Canal of a volute, a channel inclosed by a list or fillet, in the face of the circumvolutions of the Ionic capital.—False volutes, the Turbinellidæ. P. P. Carpenter.

A Volute, the Music-shell (Voluta or Volutolyria musica).

II. a. In bot., rolled up in any direction.

volute-compass (vō-lūt′kum″pas), n. A form of compass used, in drafting, to trace a spiral by means of the gradual mechanical expansion of the legs.

voluted (vō-lū′ted), a. [< volute + -ed[2].] Having a coil, whorl, or volute, as a shell.

volute-spring (vō-lūt′spring), n. A spring consisting of a flat bar or ribbon, usually of steel, coiled in a helix somewhat in the form of a volute. It is commonly made in a conical form, so that the spring can be compressed in the direction of the axis about which it is coiled.

volute-wheel (vō-lūt′hwēl), n. 1. A water-wheel with a volute-shaped casing about it to guide the water to its vanes and buckets.—2. A volute-shaped shell, that in revolving presents its open mouth to the air, which is thus gathered into the tube and discharged through the hollow axis. It is an unusual but effective form of blower.

Volutidæ (vō-lū′ti-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Voluta + -idæ.] A family of rachiglossate gastropods, typified by the genus Voluta; the volutes. They have a large undivided foot, widely separate tentacles, eyes external to the tentacles, and a single (or triple) row of radular teeth, each median tooth generally having a trifurcate or simple apex. The operculum is generally absent; when present, as in Volutolyria, it is corneous and unguiculate, with apical nucleus in the adult. The animals are retractile in a shell generally of a more or less obconic shape, with a plicated columella. They are mostly ovoviviparous, but in the genus Voluta eggs are laid in a very large thin horny capsule. The species are numerous, especially in tropical seas, and many have shells of remarkable beauty, highly esteemed by conchologists. See Voluta (with cut) and volute, 2 (a) (with cut, and other cuts there cited).

Voluta or Amoria undulata, of Australia, one of the Volutidæ, crawling with extended foot and tentacles.

volution (vō-lū′shon), n. [< L. volvere, pp. volutus, roll: see volute.] 1. A rolling or winding; a twist; especially, a spiral turn; a convolution.

The foaming base an angry whirlwind sweeps
Where curling billows rouse the fearful deeps. . . .
The swift volution and the enormous train
Let sages versed in nature's lore explain.
Falconer, Shipwreck, ii. 43.

2. In conch.: (a) A whorl; one turn of a spiral shell. (b) A set of whorls; the spire of a shell; the spiral turning or twisting of a shell. See cuts under spire[2], n., and univalve.—3. In anat., a convolution or gyration; a gyrus: as, the volutions of the brain.

volutite (vol′ū-tīt), n. [< volute + -ite[2].] A fossil volute, or a similar shell, as a species of Volvaria (which see).

A Volutite (Volvaria bulloides).

volutoid (vol′ū-toid), a. and n. [< volute + -oid.] I. a. Resembling a volute; of or relating to the Volutidæ.

II. n. A volute.

volva (vol′vä), n.; pl. volvæ (-vē). [NL., < L. volva, vulva, a wrapper, covering, < volvere, roll: see volute. Cf. vulva.] In bot., a wrapper or external covering of some sort; specifically, in Hymenomycetes, same as velum universale. Compare exoperidium. See ★velum, 2, and cut under Fungi.

Volvaria (vol-vā′ri-ä), n. [NL. (Lamarck, 1801), < L. volva, a wrapper, cover: see volva, vulva.] A genus of tectibranchiate gastropods, of the family Actæonidæ, represented by extinct Tertiary shells, as V. bulloïdes: formerly including certain smooth shells of the family Marginellidæ. See cut under volutite.

volvate (vol′vāt), a. [< volva + -ate[1].] In bot., producing, furnished with, or characteristic of a volva.

volvet† (volv), v. t. [< L. volvere, turn, roll round or about, roll. From the same L. verb are ult. E. convolve, devolve, evolve, involve, revolve, etc., volute, volt[1], vault[1], vault[2], etc.] To turn over; revolve, especially in the mind; consider; think over.

I volued, tourned, and redde many volumes and bokes, conteyning famouse histories. Berners, tr. of Froissart's Chron., Pref.

I have been volving and revolving in my fancy some time, but to no purpose, by what clean device or facete contrivance I might . . . modulate them. Sterne, Tristram Shandy, V. 109. (Davies.) volvelle (vol-vel′), n. [F.] A small and generally circular movable plate affixed to an engraving containing a dial or lottery, and made to carry the index-hand or pointer; any movable engraving superimposed on another for the purpose of showing variations. N. and Q., 6th ser., XI. 217.

volvocinaceous (vol″vō-si-nā′shius), a. [As Volvocin-eæ + -aceous.] Belonging to or characterizing the Volvocineæ.

A peculiar condition of the Volvocinaceous Algæ (Stephanosphæra pluvialis, etc.). H. C. Wood, Fresh-Water Algæ, p. 235.

Volvocineæ (vol-vō-sin′ē-ē), n. pl. [NL., < NL. Volvox (-oc-) + -ineæ.] A suborder of fresh-water algæ, of the order Protococcales, characterized by being motile during the vegetative stage.

volvocinian (vol-vō-sin′i-an), a. [As Volvocin-eæ + -ian.] Resembling a volvox, as an infusorian; volvocinaceous.

I have cited the two volvocinian genera Pandorina and Volvox as examples of the differentiation of homoplastids into the lowest heteroplastids. Nature, XLI. 318.

Volvox (vol′voks), n. [NL. (Linnæus, 1758), < L. volvere, roll, turn about: see volve.] 1. A small genus of fresh-water algæ, of the family Volvocaceæ and class Chlorophyceæ. It has a spherical cœnobium of a pale-green color, which in its vegetative stage is constantly rotating and changing place, looking like a hollow globe, composed of numerous cells (sometimes as many as twenty-two thousand) arranged on the periphery at regular distances, united by protoplasmic threads, and embedded in a common mucilaginous wall. It is furnished with a red lateral spot, contractile vacuoles, and two long-exserted cilia. Propagation is both sexual and non-sexual. V. globator, the best-known species, is not uncommon in clear pools, ponds, etc.

2. [l. c.] A member of the above genus.

volvulus (vol′vū-lus), n. [NL., < L. volvere, turn, roll: see volve.] Occlusion of the intestine, caused by a sharp bend or twist of the tube.

volyer (vol′yėr), n. The lurcher. [Prov. Eng.]

vomet†, v. [< ME. vomen, < OF. vomir, < L. vomere, vomit: see vomit.] To vomit.

He shal hurtle the hond of Moab in his vomyng. Wyclif, Jer. xlviii. 26.

vomet†, n. [ME., < vome, v.] Vomit.

Alle forsothe boordis ben fulfild with the vome and filthis. Wyclif, Isa. xxviii. 8.

vomela, vormela, n. The Sarmatian polecat, ★Putorius sarmaticus. See sarmatier.

vomer (vō′mėr), n. [NL., < L. vomer, a plowshare.] 1. In zoöl. and anat., a bone of the skull of most vertebrates; a membrane-bone or splint-bone developed in the median line of the skull, beneath the basicranial axis, primitively consisting of paired halves, which sometimes remain separate, one on each side of the middle line. Its special shapes and connections are extremely variable in the vertebrate series; in general, it is situated below or in advance of the basisphenoid, below or behind the mesethmoid, and between the maxillary, palatine, or pterygoid bones of opposite sides, serving thus as a septum between right and left nasal or naso-palatine passages. In man the vomer is plowshare-shaped, articulating with the sphenoid behind, the mesethmoid above, the palatal plates of the maxillary and palatal bones below, and the triangular median cartilage of the nose in front; it thus forms much of the nasal septum, or partition between right and left nasal cavities, its posterior free border definitely separating the posterior nares. In birds its extremely variable shapes and connections furnish valuable zoölogical characters. (See ægithognathous, and cuts under desmognathous, dromæognathous, saurognathous, and schizognathous.) The vomer is by Owen regarded as the centrum of the fourth or rhinencephalic cranial vertebra—a view now entertained by few, if any. In batrachians there are usually two vomers, often widely separated. The so-called vomer of fishes is not homologically the bone of that name in higher vertebrates, but is identified by some with the presphenoid; while others name the ichthyic vomer the anteal bone. It often bears teeth. See cuts under Chelonidæ, craniofacial, Cyclodus, Gallinæ, Lepidosiren, Ophidia, parasphenoid, Physeter, Pythonidæ, Rana, teleost, and Thinocoridæ.

Section of Skull of Elephant, greatly reduced, showing Me, mesethmoid; Vo, vomer; an, pn, anterior and posterior nares.

The bones in Fish and Amphibians usually denominated vomers must part with their claims to that title and yield it to the so-called parasphenoid. Sutton, Proc. Zoöl. Soc. Lond., 1884, p. 570.

2. In ornith., the pygostyle or rump-post; the large, peculiarly shaped terminal bone of the tail of most birds, consisting of several ankylosed vertebræ. In this sense rarely used.—Wings of the vomer. See alæ vomeris, under ala.

vomerine (vō′mėr-in), a. [< vomer + -ine[1].] Of or pertaining to the vomer.

vomic (vom′ik), a. [< L. vomicus, ulcerous, < vomica, a sore, boil, abscess, < vomere, vomit, discharge: see vomit.] Purulent; ulcerous. [Rare.]

vomica (vom'i-kä), n.; pl. vomicæ (-sē). [NL., fem. of L. vomicus, ulcerous: see vomic.] In med., a cavity in the lung, resulting from a pathological process, and containing pus.

vomicene (vom'i-sēn), n. [< vomica in nux vomica + -ene.] In chem., same as brucine.

vomic-nut (vom'ik-nut), n. [An E. rendering of NL. nux vomica: see nux vomica.] Same as vomit-nut.

vomit (vom'it), v. [< L. vomitus, pp. of vomere (> It. vomire = F. vomir: see vomé), vomit, discharge, = Gr. ἐμεῖν = Skt. √ vam, vomit. Cf. emetic.] I. trans. 1. To throw up or eject from the stomach; discharge from the stomach through the mouth: often followed by forth, up, or out.

The morsel which thou hast eaten shalt thou vomit up.
Prov. xxiii. 8.

2. To eject with violence from any hollow place; belch forth; emit.

During the night the volcano . . . vomited up vast quantities of fire and smoke. Cook, Second Voyage, iii. 5.

II. intrans. 1. To eject the contents of the stomach by the mouth; puke; spew.—2. To be emitted; come out with force or violence.

vomit (vom'it), n. [= Sp. vómito = Pg. It. vomito, < L. vomitus, a throwing up, vomiting, vomit, < vomere, pp. vomitus, vomit: see vomit, v.] 1. That which is vomited; specifically, matter ejected from the stomach in the act of vomiting; an attack of vomiting.

So, so, thou common dog, didst thou disgorge, . . .
And now thou wouldst eat thy dead vomit up.
Shak., 2 Hen. IV., i. 3. 99.

2. That which excites the stomach to discharge its contents; an emetic.

Whether a vomit may be safely given must be judged by the circumstances. Arbuthnot.

Black vomit, a blackish substance, consisting chiefly of disorganized blood, vomited in certain cases of yellow fever; also, the disease yellow fever.

vomiting (vom'i-ting), n. [Verbal n. of vomit, v.] 1. The ejection of matter from the stomach through the mouth. It is effected mainly by a spasmodic contraction of the abdominal muscles and diaphragm, occurring at the same time with dilatation of the cardiac orifice, assisted also by contraction of the muscular coats of the stomach itself.

2. That which is vomited; vomit.

Hold the chalice to beastly vomitings.
Jer. Taylor, Rule of Conscience, IV. i. 2.

Fecal or stercoraceous vomiting, ejection by the mouth of fecal matter which has been regurgitated into the stomach from the intestine; copremesis.

vomitingly (vom'i-ting-li), adv. As in vomiting; like vomit.

Take occasion, pulling out your gloves, to have some epigram, or satire, or sonnet fastened in one of them, that may, as it were vomitingly to you, offer itself to the gentlemen. Dekker, Gull's Hornbook, p. 116.

vomition (vō-mish'ọn), n. [= It. vomizione, < L. vomitio(n-), a vomiting, < vomere, vomit: see vomit.] The act or power of vomiting. [Rare.]

How many have saved their lives by spewing up their debauch! whereas, if the stomach had wanted the faculty of vomition, they had inevitably died.
N. Grew, Cosmologia Sacra.

vomitive (vom'i-tiv), a. [< F. vomitif = Sp. Pg. It. vomitivo; as vomit + -ive.] Causing the ejection of matter from the stomach; emetic.

It will become him also to know not only the ingredients but doses of certain cathartic or purging, emetic or vomitive medicines, specific or choleric, melancholic or phlegmatic constitutions, phlebotomy being only necessary for those who abound in blood.
Lord Herbert of Cherbury, Life (ed. Howells), p. 44.

vomit-nut (vom'it-nut), n. The seeds of the nux vomica tree, Strychnos Nux-vomica; quaker-buttons or poison-nut. See nux vomica. Also vomic-nut.

vomito (vom'i-tō), n. [Sp. vómito = E. vomit.] The yellow fever, in its worst form, in which it is usually attended with the black vomit.

The low, marshy regions are to be avoided . . . on account of the vomito—the scourge of those regions.
L. Hamilton, Mexican Handbook, p. 18.

vomitory (vom'i-tō-ri), a. and n. [= F. vomitoire = Sp. Pg. It. vomitorio, < L. vomitorius, vomiting (neut. pl. vomitoria, the passages in an amphitheater), < vomere, vomit, discharge: see vomit.] I. a. Procuring vomiting; causing ejection from the stomach; emetic; vomitive.

II. n.; pl. vomitories (-riz). 1. An emetic.—2. In arch., an opening or passage, usually one of a regularly disposed series, in an ancient Roman theater or amphitheater, which gave direct ingress or egress to the people in some part of the auditorium.

Amphitheater at Verona, showing Vomitories.
The large archway is one of the main entrances to the arena; the smaller one to the right of the first is an opening of the first vaulted passage beneath the seats of the auditorium; the square openings are vomitories.

vomiturition (vom″i-tū-rish'ọn), n. [< L. as if vomiturire*, desire to vomit, desiderative of vomere, vomit: see vomit.] 1. Ineffectual attempts to vomit; retching.—2. The vomiting of but little matter, or vomiting with little effort.

vomitus (vom'i-tus), n. [L., prop. pp. of vomere, vomit: see vomit.] Vomiting; vomited matter.—Vomitus niger, black vomit; yellow fever.

vondsira†, n. Same as vansire. Flacourt, 1661.

Von Graefe's operation for cataract. See operation.

Von Patera process. See process.

voodoo (vö-dö'), n. and a. [Also voudou; < creole F. vaudoux, a negro sorcerer, prob. < Dahoman vodu; poss. a dial. form of F. Vaudois, a Waldensian (the Waldenses, as heretics, being accused of sorcery). Cf. hoodoo.] I. n. 1. A common name among creoles and in many of the southern United States for any practicer of malicious, defensive, amatory, healing, or soothsaying enchantments, charms, witchcrafts, or secret rites, especially when they are tinctured with African superstitions and customs; especially, one who makes such practices a business.

The unprotected little widow should have had a very serious errand to bring her to the voudou's house.
G. W. Cable, Grandissimes, p. 90.

Every one has read of the noisy antics employed by the medicine-men among the Indians, and by the fetich-doctors and voodoos among the negroes, for driving diseases out of their patients. Pop. Sci. Mo., XXXIV. 803.

2. The power which makes a person a voodoo; the object of worship of the voodoos.

But for the small leaven of more intelligent whites, the black people would soon be victims of voudoo. Indeed, it is hard to find a rural community in the South where that dreadful bugbear is not more or less believed in and feared.
Pop. Sci. Mo., XXVI. 44.

3. pl. The practicers of voodoo rites as a collective body.

II. a. Pertaining to or associated with the superstitions and peculiar practices of the voodoos: as, a voodoo dance (a violent indecent dance belonging to the secret nocturnal ceremonies of the voodoos); a voodoo doctor, or voodoo priest (the terms most commonly used in creole countries for any professional voodoo); voodoo king or queen (the person who, by a certain vague election and tenure, holds for life a local preëminence and some slight authority over all voodoos of the surrounding country).

voodoo (vö-dö'), v. t. [Also voudou; < voodoo, n. Cf. hoodoo, v.] To affect by voodoo conjuration or charms.

What was the matter with her head, anyhow? She must be voudoued. New Princeton Rev., I. 106.

The negroes [of Louisiana] took a dislike to the overseer, and sent to the city for a conjuror to come down and voodoo him. The conjuror undertook to rid them of the overseer for $30, but finally came down in his demand to $2.50. The Century, XXXV. 112.

voodooism (vö-dö'izm), n. [Also voudouism; < voodoo + -ism.] The voodoo superstitions and practices.

The real or inner nature of Voodooism is as yet almost unknown, even to the learned . . . Unlike the Aryan and Red Indian magic based on fasting, contemplation, and "prayer," it relies on daring that which is horrible and repulsive, and, above all, in a perfectly subjective iron will.
M. A. Owen, Voodoo Tales, introd., vi.

vooga-hole (vö'ga-hōl), n. Same as vug.

voracious (vō-rā'shus), a. [= F. vorace = Sp. Pg. voraz = It. vorace, < L. vorax (vorac-), swallowing greedily, ravenous, < vorare, swallow, devour; cf. Gr. √ βορ in βορά, food, βρῶμα, food (see broma), βιβρώσκειν, eat, Skt. √ gar, swallow. Cf. vorant, devour.] 1. Greedy in eating; eating food in large quantities; marked by voracity; ravenous: as, a voracious man.

I have seen of the king carrion crows. . . . They are very voracious, and will despatch a carcass in a trice.
Dampier, Voyages, an. 1676.

They are men of a voracious appetite, but no taste.
Addison, Spectator, No. 452.

2. Rapacious.

I would have removed this defect, and formed no voracious or destructive animals, which only prey on the other parts of the creation. Goldsmith, Asem.

Confess to me, as the first proof of it [confidence], didst thou never shrink back from so voracious and intractable a monster as that accursed snake?
Landor, Imag. Conv., Alexander and the Priest of [Hammon.

3. Ready to swallow up: as, a voracious gulf or whirlpool.=Syn. 1. Ravenous, etc. See rapacious.

voraciously (vō-rā'shus-li), adv. In a voracious manner; with greedy appetite; ravenously; rapaciously.

voraciousness (vō-rā'shus-nes), n. The state or character of being voracious; greediness of appetite; ravenousness; voracity.

This necessarily puts the good man upon making great ravages on all the dishes . . . near him, and distinguishing himself by a voraciousness of appetite, as knowing that his time is short. Addison, Tatler, No. 255.

voracity (vō-ras'i-ti), n. [< F. voracité = Sp. voracidad = Pg. voracidade = It. voracità, < L. voracita(t-)s, ravenousness, < vorax (vorac-), devouring: see voracious.] The character of being voracious; greediness of appetite; voraciousness.

He ate food with what might almost be termed voracity.
Hawthorne, Seven Gables, vii.

voraginous (vō-raj'i-nus), a. [= Sp. Pg. It. voraginoso, < LL. voraginosus, full of chasms or abysses, < L. vorago, a chasm, abyss: see vorago.] Of or pertaining to a gulf or whirlpool; hence, devouring; swallowing. [Rare.]

A cavern's jaws voraginous and vast.
Mallet, Amyntor and Theodora, i.

vorago (vō-rā'gō), n. [L., a gulf, abyss, < vorare, swallow, swallow up. Cf. E. swallow[1], a gulf, abyss; cf. also gorge in similar sense.] A gulf; an abyss. [Rare.]

From hence we passed by the place into wch Curtius precipitated himself for the love of his country, now without any signe of a lake or vorago.
Evelyn, Diary, Nov. 4, 1644.

vorant (vō'rant), a. [< L. voran(t-)s, ppr. of vorare, swallow: see voracious.] In her., devouring or swallowing: noting a serpent or other creature of prey. The epithet is followed by the name of the object which is being swallowed: as, the arms of Visconti of Milan were a serpent vorant a child.

vormela, n. See vomela.

-vorous. [L. -vorus, < vorare, devour: see voracious, vorant.] The terminal element, meaning 'eating,' of various compound adjectives, as carnivorous, herbivorous, insectivorous, omnivorous, piscivorous, etc.

vortex (vôr'teks), n.; pl. vortices or vortexes (vôr'ti-sēz, vôr'tek-sez). [= Sp. vórtice = Pg. It. vortice, < L. vortex, var. vertex, a whirl, eddy, whirlpool, vortex: see vertex, another form of the word.] 1. A whirl of fluid. An intuitive geometrical idea of the motion is not easily attained. If the motion of a fluid varies continuously both in time and in space, it may be described as such that each spherical particle is at each instant receiving three compressions or elongations at right angles to one another, and has, besides, a motion of translation and a motion of rotation about an axis through it. When this motion of rotation is present, the fluid is said to have a rotational motion; but this must not be confounded with a rotation of the whole mass. Thus, if all the parts of the fluid move in one direction but with unequal velocities in different parallel planes, though there be no rotation of the whole mass, yet the motion is rotational; and if a spherical particle were suddenly congealed, its inertia would make it rotate. On the other hand, one or more radial paddles turning about the axis of a cylindrical vessel filled with a perfect fluid, though making the latter revolve as a whole, could yet impart no rotational motion, which the fluid would evade by slipping round between the paddles. The motion being perfectly continuous, the axis of rotation of a particle must join the axis of rotation of a neighboring particle, so that a curve, called a vortex-line, may be described whose tangents are the axes of rotation of the particles at their points of tangency; and such a curve must evidently return into itself or reach both extremities to the boundaries of the fluid. A vortex is a portion of fluid in rotational motion inclosed in an annular surface which is a locus of vortex-lines; and an infinitesimal vortex is called a vortex-filament. If at any part of a vortex-filament the angular velocity is greater than at another part a little removed along the vortex-line, then (considering a particle a little removed from the central vortex-line) it is plain that of two opposite parts of this particle having the same velocity in magnitude and direction and consequently on its axis of rotation, that one which is in the more rapidly moving stratum must be nearer the central vortex-line, so that the annular boundary of the vortex must present a constriction where the angular velocity is great; and thus it can be shown that the product of the mean angular velocity in any cross-section perpendicular to the vortex-lines multiplied by the area of that section is constant at all parts of the vortex. In a perfect fluid, which can sustain no distorting stress even for an instant, the velocity of a rotating particle cannot be retarded any more than if it were a frictionless sphere; and, in like manner, no such velocity can be increased. Consequently, a vortex, unlike a wave, continues to be composed of the same identical matter. When the motion is continuous throughout the fluid, two vortices exercise a singular action upon one another, each ring in turn contracting and passing through the aperture of the other, which stretches, with other singular motions.

2. Any whirling or gyratory motion; also, a whirlpool.

He soon found himself absorbed in the same vortex of worldly passions and interests from which he had been so anxious to escape. Prescott, Ferd. and Isa., ii. 5.

3. In the Cartesian philosophy, a collection of material particles, forming a fluid or ether, endowed with a rapid rotatory motion about an axis, and filling all space, by which Descartes accounted for the motions of the universe. This theory attracted much attention at one time, but is now entirely discredited.—3. [cap.] [NL.] In zoöl., the typical genus of Vorticidæ, containing such species as V. viridis.—Electrolytic vortices, currents supposed to circulate round closed paths in the liquid or liquid and plate, but not passing through the external circuit, in an electrolytic cell.—Vortex of the heart, the peculiar spiral concentration of the fibers at the apex, produced by the twisting of the external fibers as they pass back to join those of the inner layer.—Vortex-ring, in physics, a vortical molecular filament or column returning into itself so as to form a ring composed of a number of small rotating circles placed side by side, like beads on a string, as the singular smoke-rings which are sometimes produced when a cannon is fired, or when a smoker skilfully emits a puff of tobacco-smoke. Recent labors in the theoretical investigation of the motion of vortices, more particularly the theorems relating to vortex-filaments rotating round a central axis in a frictionless or perfect fluid (vortex-atoms), have suggested the possibility of founding on them a new form of the atomic theory.—Vortex theory, the theory that atoms of ordinary matter are vortices in a perfect fluid. Such vortices have been shown by Helmholtz to possess the necessary properties of atoms such as indestructibility, impenetrability, perfect elasticity, etc.—Vortices lentis, star-like figures seen on the surface of the lens of the eye.

vortex-filament (vôr'teks-fil″a-ment), n. In hydrodynamics, the portion of fluid included within a vortex-tube.

vortex-motion (vôr'teks-mō″shon), n. A rotational motion of a fluid in which there is circulation about certain vortex-filaments, and no circulation except about them.

vortex-tube (vôr'teks-tūb), n. An imaginary tube within a fluid whose surface is the locus of vortex-lines through a small closed curve drawn arbitrarily.

vortex-wheel (vôr'teks-hwēl), n. A turbine.

vortical (vôr'ti-kal), a. and n. [< vortex (vortic-), vortex, + -al.] I. a. Causing a vortex, as an infusorian.

II. n. Any ciliate infusorian which makes a vortex.

vortically (vôr'ti-kal-i), adv. In a vortical manner; whirlingly.

vortricel, vortricell (vôr'ti-sel), n. [< NL. Vorticella.] An infusorian animalcule of the family Vorticellidæ; a bell-animalcule.

Vorticella nebulifera, highly magnified.

a, circlet of cilia borne upon the disk b; c, peristome; e, esophagus; f, contractile vacuole; g, one of several food-vacuoles; h, nucleus; i, endosarc; k, ectosarc; l, infundibuliform beginning of the muscular stem, most of the length of which is omitted.

Vorticella (vôr-ti-sel'ä), n. [NL. (O. F. Müller, 1773 or 1786, but existent in form for more than a century before), dim. of L. vortex, a whirl: see vortex.] The typical genus of Vorticellidæ, having a retractile pedicel; the bell-animalcules. Many species are inhabitants of both salt and fresh water; they are very numerous, and among the most elegant animalcules, looking like tiny transparent wine-glasses or bells borne on fine elastic stems, and continually waving about in the most graceful manner, "as if they were ringing chimes for Undines to dance." V. convallaria was described by Leeuwenhoek in 1675 as an "animalcule of the first size," and called by Linnæus Hydra convallaria in 1758. It occurs in stagnant water and in infusions. See also cut under Infusoria.

Vorticellidæ (vôr-ti-sel'i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Vorticella + -idæ.] Vorticels or bell-animalcules, a family of peritrichous ciliate infusorians which are sedentary or attached by a sucking disk, or a contractile stalk. These animalcules are campanulate, ovate, or subcylindrical, with eccentric terminal mouth having a spiral fringe of adoral cilia, the right limb of which descends into the mouth, while the left wreathes about a movable ciliate disk; they rarely if ever have trichocysts, but usually a long, slender vestibular seta. The family is one of the largest and most easily recognizable among infusorians, the oral structures being very characteristic. The little creatures inhabit both salt and fresh water. Some are naked, constituting the Vorticellinæ; others live in hard (Vaginicolinæ) or soft (Ophrydiinæ) loricæ or investing sheaths. There are several genera and numerous species. See Carchesium, and cuts under Epistylis, Infusoria, and Vorticella.

vorticellidan (vôr-ti-sel'i-dan), a. and n. I. a. Of or pertaining to the Vorticellidæ; vorticelline in a broad sense.

II. n. A bell-animalcule; any vorticel.

Vorticellinæ (vôr″ti-se-lī'nē), n. pl. [NL., < Vorticella + -inæ.] In a strict sense, a subfamily of Vorticellidæ, containing only the naked vorticels, solitary or social, and sessile or pedicellate. This definition excludes the Vaginicolinæ and Ophrydiinæ, which are not naked.

vorticelline (vôr-ti-sel'in), a. Of or pertaining to the Vorticellinæ.

vortices, n. Latin plural of vortex.

vorticial (vôr-tish'al), a. An erroneous form of vortical.

Cyclic and seemingly gyrating or vorticial movements. Poe, Eureka.

Vorticidæ (vôr-tis'i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Vortex (-tic-) + -idæ.] A family of rhabdocœlous turbellarians, typified by the genus Vortex, containing both fresh-water and marine forms, some of which are parasitic on gastropods and holothurians.

vorticose (vôr'ti-kōs), a. [< L. vortex (vortic-), a whirl, vortex, + -ose.] 1. Whirling; vortical.

Only a very small percentage of the spots show any trace of vorticose motion. C. A. Young, The Sun, p. 173.

2. In anat., specifying the veins of the external layer of the choroid coat of the eyeball, the venæ vorticosæ, which are regularly arranged in drooping branches converging to a few equidistant trunks which perforate the sclerotic coat and empty into the ophthalmic vein.

vorticular (vôr-tik'ū-lär), a. Same as vorticose.

They [storms] possess truly vorticular motion. The Atlantic, LXVIII. 68.

vortiginous (vôr-tij'i-nus), a. [< L. vortiginosus*, assumed var. of vertiginosus, < vertigo, a whirling: see vertiginous.] Having a motion round a center or axis; vortical.

The fix'd and rooted earth,
Tormented into billows, heaves and swells,
Or with vortiginous and hideous whirl
Sucks down its prey insatiable.
Cowper, Task, ii. 102.

votable (vō'ta-bl), a. [< vote + -able.] Capable of voting; having a right to vote. [Rare.]

When "the votable inhabitance convened in His Majesties name September 24, 1754."
Town Records of Wareham, Mass., quoted in New Princeton Rev., IV. 253.

votal (vō'tal), a. [< L. votum, a vow, + -al.] Pertaining to a vow or promise; consisting in or involving a promise. [Rare.]

Debt is not deadly sin when a man hath no means, but when he hath no meaning to pay. There must be votal restitution, if there cannot be actual.
Rev. T. Adams, Works, I. 145.

votaress (vō'ta-res), n. [< votar-y + -ess.] A female votary.

His woeful queen we leave at Ephesus, Unto Diana there a votaress.
Shak., Pericles, Prol., iv.

votarist (vō'ta-rist), n. [< votar-y + -ist.] A votary.

The votarists of Saint Clare. Shak., M. for M., i. 4. 5.
Like a sad votarist in palmer's weed.
Milton, Comus, l. 189.

votary (vō'ta-ri), a. and n. [< NL. votarius*, < L. votum, a vow: see vote, vow.] I. a. Consecrated by a vow or promise; also, consequent on a vow; devoted; votive.

Votary resolution is made equipollent to custom, even in matter of blood.
Bacon, Custom and Education (ed. 1887), p. 397.

II. n.; pl. votaries (-riz). One who is devoted, consecrated, or engaged by a vow or promise; hence, more generally, one who is devoted, given, or addicted to some particular service, worship, study, or state of life.

Already Love's firm votary. Shak., T. G. of V., iii. 2. 58.

Votaries of business and of pleasure prove Faithless alike in friendship and in love.
Cowper, Verses from Valediction.

He deemed that a faith which taught that Jupiter of the Capitol was a thing of naught was a faith which it became his votary to root out from all the lands that bowed to Jove and to Jovius. E. A. Freeman, Venice, p. 139.

Music and painting and sculpture could also boast of distinguished votaries under the Regency.
The Academy, Oct. 25, 1890, p. 360.

vote (vōt), n. [< F. vote, a vote, = Sp. Pg. It. voto, a vow, wish, vote, < L. votum, a promise, wish, an engagement, < vovere, pp. votus, promise, dedicate, vow, wish: see vow.] 1†. An ardent wish or desire; a prayer; a vow.

All the heavens consent
With harmony to tune their notes,
In answer to the public votes,
That for it up were sent.
B. Jonson, Fortunate Isles.

Iol. The end of my Devotions is that one and the same hour
May make us fit for heaven.
Sev. I join with you
In my votes that way. Massinger, Guardian, v. 1.

Those interchangeable votes of priest and people, . . . "O Lord, arise, help us, and deliver us for thy Name's sake! O God, we have heard with our ears, &c."
Prideaux, Euchologia, p. 226.

2. A suffrage; the formal expression of a will, preference, wish, or choice in regard to any measure proposed, in which the person voting has an interest in common with others, either in electing a person to fill a certain situation or office, or in passing laws, rules, regulations, etc. This vote or choice may be expressed by holding up the hand, by standing up, by the voice (viva voce), by ballot, or otherwise.

Each party gaped, and looked alternately for their vote almost to the end of their speeches.
Burke, American Taxation.

He . . . was already a forty-shilling freeholder, and was conscious of a vote for the county.
George Eliot, Felix Holt, xi.

Hence—3. That by which will or preference is expressed in elections; a ballot, a ticket, etc.: as, a written vote.

The freeman, casting with unpurchased hand
The vote that shakes the turrets of the land.
O. W. Holmes, Poetry, A Metrical Essay.

4. That which is allowed, conveyed, or bestowed by the will of a majority; a thing conferred by vote; a grant: as, the ministry received a vote of confidence; the vote for the civil service amounted to $24,000,000.—5. Expression of will by a majority; decision by some expression of the minds of a number; result of voting: as, the vote was unanimous; the vote was close.—6. Votes collectively: as, a movement to capture the labor vote.—Casting vote. See casting-vote.—Cumulative vote. See cumulative system of voting, under cumulative.—Limited vote, a form of voting by which the elector is restricted to a less number of votes than there are vacancies, as in the case of a three-cornered constituency (which see, under three-cornered).—Straw vote. See straw[1].—The floating vote. See floating.—To split one's votes. See split.

vote (vōt), v.; pret. and pp. voted, ppr. voting. [< F. voter, vote, < vote, vote: see vote, n.] I. intrans. To give a vote; formally to express or signify the mind, will, or choice in electing persons to office, or in passing laws, and the like, or in deciding as to any measure in which one has an interest in common with others.

They voted then to do a deed
As kirkmen to devise.
Battle of Balrinnes (Child's Ballads, VII. 221).

For their want of intimate knowledge of affairs, I do not think this ought to disqualify them [women] from voting at any town-meeting which I ever attended.
Emerson, Woman.

Cumulative system of voting. See cumulative.—To vote straight, to vote the entire ticket, as of a political party, without scratching. [Colloq.]

II. trans. 1. To enact or establish by vote, as a resolution or an amendment.—2. To grant by vote, as an appropriation.

Parliament voted them a hundred thousand pounds.
Swift.

3. To declare by general consent; characterize by expression of opinion: as, they voted the trip a failure. [Colloq.]

It has come to be voted rather a vulgar thing to be married by banns at all.
Daily Telegraph, March 20, 1888. (Encyc. Dict.)

To vote down, to defeat (a proposition), as in a legislative body; give public judgment against; hence, to put an end to.

Old truths voted down begin to resume their places.
Sir T. Browne, Christ. Mor., ii. 5.

It is of no use to vote down gravitation or morals.
Emerson, Fugitive Slave Law.

To vote in, to choose by suffrage; elect, as to an appointment or office, by expression of will or preference: as, he was voted in by a handsome majority.

voteless (vōt'les), a. [< vote + -less.] Having no vote; not entitled to a vote.

He was not enlightened enough to know that there was a way of using voteless miners and navvies at Nominations and Elections. George Eliot, Felix Holt, xi.

voter (vō'tėr), n. [< vote + -er[1].] One who votes or has a legal right to vote; an elector.

Of late years, . . . when it has been considered necessary by politicians to cultivate the foreign-born voters, there has been a great tendency to appoint naturalized citizens as consuls. Schuyler, Amer. Diplomacy, p. 81.

Registration of voters. See registration.

vote-recorder (vōt'rē-kôr″dėr), n. An electrical device which records the yea or nay of a voter when the corresponding knob or button is pressed.

voting-paper (vō'ting-pā″pėr), n. A balloting-paper; particularly, according to the British Ballot Act of 1872, a paper used in voting by ballot in the election of members of Parliament, of municipal corporations, etc. Such papers are used only in cases where the number of candidates exceeds the number of vacancies; they contain a list of the candidates, and the voter is required to put a mark opposite the name of each candidate he selects.

votist† (vō'tist), n. [< L. votum, vow, + -ist.] One who makes a vow; a vower; a votarist.

Try
If a poor woman, votist of revenge,
Would not perform it.
Chapman, Revenge of Bussy D'Ambois, iii. 1.

votive (vō'tiv), a. [< F. votif = Sp. Pg. It. votivo, < L. votivus, of or pertaining to a vow, conformable to one's wish, < votum, vow: see vote, vow.] 1. Offered, contributed, or consecrated in accordance with a vow: as, a votive picture.

Not gold, not blood, their altar dowers,
But votive tears and symbol flowers.
Shelley, Hellas.

We set to-day a votive stone,
That memory may their dead redeem,
When, like our sires, our sons are gone.
Emerson, Concord Monument.

Votive tablets commemorative of cures and deliverance were hung around.
C. E. Norton, Travel and Study in Italy, p. 232.

2. Observed, practised, or done in consequence of a vow. [Rare.]

Votive abstinence some cold constitutions may endure.
Feltham, Resolves, i. 85.

Diversions of this kind have a practical value, even though they seem to be those of a knight tilting at a wayside tournament as he rides on his votive quest.
Stedman, Vict. Poets, p. 399.

Votive mass. See mass[1].—Votive offering, a tablet, picture, or the like dedicated in fulfilment of the vow (Latin ex voto) of a worshiper. Among the Greeks and Romans such offerings were dedicated to deities or heroes, and were affixed to the walls of temples, or set up in consecrated places, often in niches cut in the rock in a locality reputed sacred. Among Roman Catholics they are usually set up in chapels dedicated to the Virgin or to a saint.

votively (vō'tiv-li), adv. In a votive manner; by vow.

votiveness (vō'tiv-nes), n. The state or character of being votive.

votress† (vō'tres), n. Same as votaress.

vouch (vouch), v. [< ME. vouchen, vowchen, < OF. voucher, vocher, < L. vocare, call, call upon, summon: see vocation, voice. Cf. vouchsafe, avouch.] I. trans. 1†. To call to witness.

And vouch the silent stars, and conscious moon.
Dryden, tr. of Ovid's Metamorph., xiii. 22.

2. To declare; assert; affirm; attest; avouch.

Praised therefore be his name, which voucheth us worthy this honour.
J. Bradford, Letters (Parker Soc., 1853), II. 176.

What can you vouch against him, Signior Lucio?
Shak., M. for M., v. 1. 326.

What we have done
None shall dare vouch, though it be truly known.
Shelley, Revolt of Islam, ix. 31.

3. To warrant; be surety for; answer for; make good; confirm.

Go tell the lords o' the city I am here;
Deliver them this paper; having read it,
Bid them repair to the market-place, where I,
Even in theirs and in the commons' ears,
Will vouch the truth of it. Shak., Cor., v. 6. 5.

When I arrived at Scutari, they took my slave from me, as I had not the original writing by me to vouch the property of him. Pococke, Description of the East, II. ii. 126.

4. To support; back; second; follow up. [Rare.]

Bold words vouch'd with a deed so bold.
Milton, P. L., v. 66.

5. In law: (a) To produce vouchers for, in support of a charge in account. (b) In old Eng. law, to call or summon into court to warrant and defend, or to make good a warranty of title.

He vouches the tenant in tail, who vouches over the common vouchee. Blackstone, Com., II. xxi.

=Syn. 2. To asseverate, aver, protest.

II. intrans. To bear witness; give testimony or attestation; more specifically, in old Eng. law, to call in some one to make good his alleged warranty of title; be surety or guaranty.

Vouch with me, heaven. Shak., Othello, i. 3. 262.

The Salvo of Sir John Friendly's appearing at last, and vouching for Lord Foplington, won't mend the matter.
Jeremy Collier, Short View (ed. 1698), p. 215.

A very clear account, upon my word; and I dare swear the lady will vouch for every article of it.
Sheridan, School for Scandal, iv. 3.

To vouch to warranty, in old Eng. law, to call in a third person as a substituted defendant, to defend the title acquired from him. =Syn. Of vouch for, warrant, assure, guarantee.

vouch (vouch), n. [< vouch, v.] Approving or supporting warrant; confirmation; attestation.

Why in this woolvish toge should I stand here,
To beg of Hob and Dick, that do appear,
Their needless vouches? Shak., Cor., ii. 3. 124.

vouchee (vou-chē'), n. [< vouch + -ee[1].] In law, the person who is vouched or summoned in a writ of right.

All trouble on this score was avoided by choosing as vouchee some one who notoriously had no lands to make recompense withal, and therefore was, as we now say, not worth powder and shot. F. Pollock, Land Laws, p. 31.

voucher (vou'chėr), n. [< vouch + -er[1].] 1. One who vouches, or gives attestation or confirmation; one who is surety for another.

He knows his own strength so well that he never dares praise anything in which he has not a French author for his voucher. Addison, Tatler, No. 165.

Some banks will not take the accounts of persons introduced only by their own clerks, for fear they might be confederates in some scheme of fraud or plunder. Other and responsible vouchers are required.
Harper's Mag., LXXX. 468.

2. A book, paper, document, or stamp which serves to prove the truth of accounts, or to confirm and establish facts of any kind; specifically, a receipt or other written evidence of the payment of money.

The stamp is a mark, . . . and a public voucher, that a piece of such denomination is of such a weight.
Locke, Further Considerations concerning Raising the [Value of Money.

He caused the accounts to be examined by the proper officer, who, after comparing every article with its voucher, certified them to be right. Franklin, Autobiog., p. 260.

3. In old Eng. law: (a) The tenant in a writ of right; one who called in another to establish his warranty of title. In common recoveries there might be a single voucher or double vouchers. [Also written vouchor.] (b) The calling in of a person to vouch.—Double voucher, an incident in the alienation of land by the fiction of common recovery, where the owner was allowed to convey to a third person who, being sued, alleged that the former warranted the title, and he, being called to vouch for it, was allowed to allege that still another warranted it to him, the object being to bar contingent interests, etc.

vouchment (vouch'ment), n. [< vouch + -ment.] A declaration or affirmation; a solemn assertion.

Their vouchment by their honour in that tryal is not an oath. Bp. Hacket, Abp. Williams, i. 77. (Davies.) vouchor (vou'chor), n. [< vouch + -or[1].] See voucher, 3 (a).

vouchsafe (vouch-sāf'), v.; pret. and pp. vouchsafed, ppr. vouchsafing. [< ME. vouchen safe, saf, sauf, prop. two words, lit. 'guarantee (as) safe'; < vouch + safe.] I. trans. 1†. To guarantee as safe; secure; assure.

That the quen be of-sent, sauf wol i fouche.
William of Palerne (E. E. T. S.), l. 4152.

So Philip is wild, on that wise we it take
As ge haf mad present, the kyng vouches it saue.
Rob. of Brunne, p. 260. (Richardson.)

2. To permit, grant, or bestow: sometimes with implied condescension: as, not to vouchsafe an answer.

I have assailed her with music, but she vouchsafes no notice. Shak., Cymbeline, ii. 3. 45.

In your pardon, and the kiss vouchsafed me,
You did but point me out a fore-right way
To lead to certain happiness.
Massinger, Parliament of Love, iii. 3.

Sir, I must thank you for the Visit you vouchsafed me in this simple Cell. Howell, Letters, ii. 69.

3†. To receive or accept by way of condescension.

There she sate, vouchsafing my cloak (then most gorgeous) under her. Sir P. Sidney, Arcadia, i.

Upon which better part our prayers come in,
If thou vouchsafe them. Shak., K. John, iii. 1. 294.

II. intrans. To permit; grant; condescend; deign; stoop.

Than he preyede devoutly to God, that he wolde vouche saf to suffre him gon up. Mandeville, Travels, p. 149.

God vouched sauf thurgh thee with us to acorde.
Chaucer, A. B. C., l. 27.

Vouchsafe, noble Lady, to accept this simple remembrance. Spenser, Tears of the Muses, Ded.

vouchsafement (vouch-sāf'ment), n. [< vouchsafe + -ment.] The act of vouchsafing, or that which is vouchsafed; a gift or grant in condescension. [Rare.]

Peculiar experiences being such vouchsafements to them, which God communicated to none but his chosen people.
Stillingfleet, Sermons, I. viii.

voudou, voudouism. See voodoo, voodooism.

vouge (vözh), n. Same as voulge.

vough, n. Same as vug.

voulge (vözh), n. [< OF. voulge, vouge, voouge, F. vouge (ML. vanga), a hunting-spear, a lance; origin unknown.] A weapon consisting of a blade fitted on a long handle or staff, used by the foot-soldiers of the fourteenth century and later. It varied in form, resembling sometimes the fauchard, sometimes the war-scythe, sometimes the halberd, and was frequently like an ax the blade of which, with but slight projection, has great length in the direction of the staff, and is finished at the end in a sharp point.

Voulge of the end of the 14th century. (From Viollet-le-Duc's "Dict. du Mobilier français.") voundt, a. An unexplained word, perhaps a mistake for round, occurring in the following passage:

Though it were of no vounde stone,
Wrought with squyre and scantilone.
Rom. of the Rose, l. 7063.

vourt†, v. t. [ME. vourer, < OF. vourer*, vorer, < L. vorare, devour, eat; cf. voracious, devour.] To devour.

Thei whom the swerd deuowrede [var. vowrede].
Wyclif, 2 Ki. [2 Sam.] xviii. 8.

vourert, n. A devourer.

Lo! a man deuourere, ether glotoun [var. vourer or glotoun]. Wyclif, Luke vii. 34.

voussoir (vö-swor'), n. [F.; cf. voussure, the curvature of a vault, prop. < vousser*, < LL. as if volutiare*, make round, < L. volutus, a rolling, < volvere, pp. volutus, roll: see volute.] In arch., a stone in the shape of a truncated wedge, which forms part of an arch. The under sides of the voussoirs form the intrados or soffit of the arch, and the upper sides the extrados. The middle voussoir is often termed the keystone. See arch[1], 2.

voussoir (vö-swor'), v. t. [< voussoir, n.] To form with voussoirs; construct by means of voussoirs. Encyc. Brit., II. 387.

voutet, n. An obsolete form of vault[1].

voutret, voutert, n. Obsolete forms of vulture.

vow (vou), n. [< ME. vow, < OF. vou, vo, veu, F. vœu = Sp. Pg. It. voto, a vow, < L. votum, a promise, dedication, vow, < vovere, promise, vow: see vote, n., of which vow is a doublet.] 1. A solemn promise; an engagement solemnly entered into. Specifically—(a) A kind of promissory oath made to God, or to some deity, to perform some act or dedicate to the deity something of value, often in the event of receiving something specially desired, such as success in an enterprise, deliverance from danger, or recovery from sickness: as, a vow to build an altar.

Would I were even the saint they make their vows to!
How easily I would grant! Fletcher, Pilgrim, i. 2.

Forc'd Consecrations out of another mans Estate are no better than forc'd Vows, hateful to God who loves a chearful giver. Milton, Touching Hirelings.

A vow is a deliberate promise made to God in regard to something possessing superior goodness. To be valid, it must proceed from the free, deliberate will of one who, by age and social position, is capable of contracting a solemn obligation. It is to God alone that a vow is taken, and . . . it is an act of religion, or of divine worship. To vow to a saint means, in the minds of Catholics, to vow to God in honour of a saint. Ronn. Cath. Dict.

(b) A promise to follow out some line of conduct, or to consecrate or devote one's self wholly or in part for a longer or shorter time to some act or service; a pledge of fidelity or constancy: as, a marriage vow.

Fooles therefore
They are which fortunes doe by vowes devize,
Sith each unto himselfe his life may fortunize.
Spenser, F. Q., VI. ix. 30.

By all the vows that ever men have broke,
In number more than ever women spoke.
Shak., M. N. D., i. 1. 175.

But, for performance of your vow, I entreat
Some gage from you.
Fletcher (and another), Fair Maid of the Inn, ii. 1.

2†. A solemn asseveration or declaration; a positive assertion.

What instance gives Lord Warwick for his vow?
Shak., 2 Hen. VI., iii. 2. 159.

3†. A votive offering; an ex-voto.

Belonging to this church is a world of plate, some whole statues of it, and lamps innumerable, besides the costly vowes hung up, some of gold, and a cabinet of precious stones. Evelyn, Diary, May 21, 1645.

Baptismal vows. See baptismal.—Monastic vows. See monastic.

vow (vou), v. [< ME. vowen, < OF. vouer, vower, F. vouer = Sp. Pg. votar = It. votare, promise, vow, vote, < ML. votare, promise, vow, < L. votum, promise, vow: see vow, n. Cf. vote, v.] I. trans. 1. To promise solemnly; undertake, by a solemn promise, as to God or a deity, to do, perform, or give; devote.

And Jacob vowed a vow, saying, If God will be with me, and will keep me in this way that I go, and will give me bread to eat, and raiment to put on, . . . then shall the Lord be my God: . . . and of all that thou shalt give me I will surely give the tenth unto thee. Gen. xxviii. 20–22.

Mine own good maister Harvey, to whom I have, both in respect of your worthinesse generally and otherwyse upon some particular and special considerations, voued this my labour. Spenser, To Gabriell Harvey.

By Mahomet
The Turk there vows, on his blest Alcoran, Marriage unto her.
Beau. and Fl., Knight of Malta, i. 1.

I vow and I swear, by the fan in my hand,
That my lord shall nae mair come near me.
The Gypsie Laddie (Child's Ballads, IV. 117).

2. To threaten solemnly or upon oath.

Weeping, cursing, vowing vengeance.
Shak., T. and C., v. 5. 31.

3. To assert or maintain solemnly; asseverate; swear.

He heard him swear and vow to God
He came but to be duke of Lancaster.
Shak., 1 Hen. IV., iv. 3. 60.

Brisk. I vow it is a pleasureable Morning; the Waters taste so finely after being fuddled last Night. Neighbour Fribbler, here 's a Pint to you.
Frib. I'll pledge you, Mrs. Brisket; I have drunk eight already. Shadwell, Epsom Wells, i. 1.

Sir Peter vows he has not his equal in England; and, above all, he praises him as a man of sentiment.
Sheridan, School for Scandal, i. 1.

It was my first experience with camels, and I vowed that it should be my last; for, taking them altogether, they are the most tiresome and troublesome animals I have ever seen. The Century, XLI. 351.

II. intrans. To make vows or solemn promises; protest solemnly; asseverate; declare emphatically.

Better is it that thou shouldest not vow, than that thou shouldest vow and not pay. Eccl. v. 5.

vow-breach (vou'brēch), n. The breaking of a vow.

He that vows . . . never to commit an error hath taken a course that his little infirmities shall become crimes, and certainly be imputed, by changing his unavoidable infirmity into vow-breach.
Jer. Taylor, Works (ed. 1835), I. 692.

vow-break (vou'brāk), n. Same as vow-breach.

vow-breaker (vou'brā″kėr), n. One who breaks his vow or vows.

And this is that holy bishop Paphnutius, whom these euangelical vow-breakers pretend to be their proctor for theire unlauful marriages.
M. Harding, quoted in Bp. Jewell's Works [(Parker Soc.), III. 386.

★vowel (vou'el), n. and a. [Formerly also vowell; < F. voyelle = Sp. Pg. vocal = It. vocale, a vowel, < L. vocalis, a vowel, fem. (sc. littera, letter) of vocalis, sounding, sonorous, < vox (voc-), voice, sound: see voice, vocal.] I. n. 1. One of the openest, most resonant, and continuable sounds uttered by the voice in the process of speaking; a sound in which the element of tone, though modified and differentiated by positions of the mouth-organs, is predominant; a tone-sound, as distinguished from a fricative (in which a rustling between closely approximated organs is the predominant element), from a mute (in which the explosion of a closure is characteristic), and so on. Vowel and consonant are relative terms, distinguishing respectively the opener and closer utterances; but there is no absolute division between them. Certain sounds are so open as to be only vowels; certain others so close as to be only consonants; but there are yet others which have the value now of vowels and now of consonants. Thus, l and n have frequently vowel-value in English, as in apple, token; and r is in various languages a much-used vowel. Also, the semivowels y and w are not appreciably different from the i-vowel (of pique) and the u-vowel (of rule) respectively. A sound, namely, is a vowel if it forms the central or open element of a syllable, being a syllable either alone or in conjunction with the closer sounds (consonants) that accompany it. (See syllable.) The openest of the vowels is a (as in far, father); the closest are i and u (in pique, rule); and these three, with e and o (as in they, tone), intermediate respectively between a and i and a and u, are hardly wanting in any known human language. But many others are found in various languages, and their number is theoretically unlimited.

2. The letter or character which represents such a sound.—Neutral vowel. See neutral.

II. a. Pertaining to a vowel; vocal.—Vowel points. See point[1].

★vowel (vou'el), v. t.; pret. and pp. voweled, vowelled, ppr. voweling, vowelling. [< vowel, n.] To provide or complete with vowels; insert vowels in (a word or syllable).

With pauses, cadence, and well-vowelled words.
Dryden, To Roscommon.

The vowelling of Greek and Latin proper names shews that the vagueness of the vowels was not absolute.
Encyc. Brit., XI. 797.

vowelish† (vou'el-ish), a. [< vowel + -ish[1].] Of the nature of a vowel. B. Jonson, Eng. Grammar, i. 3.

vowelism (vou'el-izm), n. [< vowel + -ism.] The use of vowels.

vowelist (vou'el-ist), n. [< vowel + -ist.] One who is addicted to vowelism.

As a repetitionary vowelist, Mr. —— is virtuous compared with Milton. Athenæum, No. 3280, p. 334.

vowelize (vou'el-īz), v. t.; pret. and pp. vowelized, ppr. vowelizing. [< vowel + -ize.] To insert vowel-signs in, as in Semitic words or shorthand forms written primarily with consonants only.

"Tom Brown's School-Days" will be immediately issued in the easy reporting style [of shorthand], fully vowelized.
The American, VI. 314.

vowelless (vou'el-les), a. [< vowel + -less.] Without a vowel or vowels.

Hebrew, with its vowel-less roots, which require vocalisation before they can attain any meaning.
Farrar, Language and Languages, p. 395.

vowelly (vou'el-i), a. [< vowel + -ly[1].] Abounding in vowels; characterized by vowel-sounds.

The mellifluence and flexibility of the vowelly language [Italian] were favorable to unrhymed verse.
I. D'Israeli, Amen. of Lit., I. 349.

vower (vou'ėr), n. [< vow + -er[1].] One who makes a vow.

These prycke eared prynces myghte truste those vowers, as hawkes made to theyr handes, yet wolde I counsell the christen prynces in no wyse to trust them.
Bp. Bale, Apology, fol. 142.

vowess (vou'es), n. [< vow + -ess.] A woman who has taken a vow; a nun. [Rare.]

In that church also lieth this ladie, buried . . . in the habit of a vowesse.
Harrison, Descrip. of Eng., ii. 3 (Holinshed's Chron., I.).

vow-fellow (vou'fel″ō), n. One who is bound by the same vow. [Rare.]

Vow-fellows with this virtuous duke.

vowless (vou'les), a. [< vow + -less.] Without a vow; not bound by a vow.

He hath done with their own vows, and now descends to us, whom he confesses vowless.
Bp. Hall, Honour of Married Clergy, i. § 17.

vowson†, n. Same as advowson.

The seyd William was with the prior of Norwiche of counseille in hese trewe defence ageyn the entent of the seyd Walter in a sute that he made ageyn the seyd priour of a voweson of the chyrche of Sprouston in the counte of Norffolk. Paston Letters, I. 18.

★vox (voks), n. [L.: see voice.] Voice; in music, a voice or voice-part.—Vox angelica, in organ-building, a stop having two pipes to each digital, one of which is tuned slightly sharp, so that by their dissonance a wavy effect is produced. The pipes are of narrow scale, and the tone is delicate. Also vox cælestis, unda maris, etc.—Vox antecedens, the theme or antecedent of a canon or fugue.—Vox barbara, a barbarous or outlandish word or phrase: commonly used, in zoölogy and botany, of those terms which are ostensibly New Latin, but which are neither Latin nor Greek, nor of classic derivation and formation, or are hybrids between Latin and Greek. Some thousands of such words are current, though rejected by some purists; and their use is far less objectionable than the unending confusion in nomenclature which attends the attempt to discard them. (See synonym, 2 (b).) Usually abbreviated vox barb.—Vox cælestis. Same as vox angelica.—Vox consequens, the answer or consequent of a canon or fugue.—Vox humana, in organ-building, a reed-stop having short capped pipes, so constructed as to reinforce the higher harmonics of the fundamental tones, and thus to produce tones more or less resembling those of the human voice. The imitation is not close, but under suitable conditions the illusion of a distant singer or choir is possible. The tremulant is usually combined with the vox humana. A stop of the same name, but of much less effectiveness, is often placed in reed-organs.—Vox quinta. Same as quintus.

voyage (voi'āj), n. [Early mod. E. also voiage; < ME. voyage, voiage, veiage, veage, viage, vyage, < OF. voiage, veiage, viage, F. voyage = Sp. viaje = Pg. viagem = It. viaggio, travel, journey, voyage, < L. viaticum, provision for a journey, LL. a journey, neut. of viaticus, pertaining to travel, < via, a way, road, journey, travel: see viaticum, of which voyage is a doublet.] 1. Formerly, a passage or journey by land or by sea; now only a journey or passage by sea or water from one place, port, or country to another, especially a passing or journey by water to a distant place or country: as, a voyage to India.

voyage (voi'āj), v.; pret. and pp. voyaged, ppr. voyaging. [< OF. voyager, travel, < voyage, travel: see voyage.] I. intrans. To take a journey or voyage; especially, to sail or pass by water.

Beautiful bird! thou voyagest to thine home.
Shelley, Alastor.

A mind for ever
Voyaging through strange seas of Thought alone.
Wordsworth, Prelude, iii.

II. trans. To travel; pass over; traverse.

Long were to tell
What I have done, what suffer'd; with what pain
Voyaged the unreal, vast, unbounded deep.
Milton, P. L., x. 471.

The Rhone of to-day must be something like the Rhine of fifty years ago, though much less voyaged now than that was then. The Century, XL. 636.

voyageable (voi'āj-a-bl), a. [< voyage + -able.] Capable of being sailed or traveled over; navigable.

voyager (voi'āj-ėr), n. [< voyage + -er[1].] One who voyages; one who sails or passes by sea or water.

You go on to prefer my Captivity in this Fleet to that of a Voyager at Sea. Howell, Letters, ii. 39.

In a few short moments I retrace
(As in a map the voyager his course)
The windings of my way through many years.
Cowper, Task, vi. 17.

voyageur (vwo-yä-zhėr'), n. [F., < voyager, travel; as voyager.] The Canadian name of one of a class of men employed by the Northwest and Hudson's Bay companies in transporting men and supplies, and, in general, in keeping up communication between their various stations, which was done exclusively in bark canoes, the whole region formerly under the exclusive control of these companies being almost everywhere accessible by water, with few and short portages. These men were nearly always French Canadians or half-breeds.

Such was the routine of our journey, the day, generally speaking, being divided into six hours of rest and eighteen of labour. This almost incredible toil the voyageurs bore without a murmur, and generally with such a hilarity of spirit as few other men could sustain for a single forenoon.

Gov. Simpson, Journey Round the World, I. 22.

voyaging (voi'āj-ing), n. [Verbal n. of voyage, v.] The act or process of taking a voyage; a journey by water.

It is, in fact, a diary of the voyagings and residences of the ambassadors of Henry the Third.

Ticknor, Span. Lit., I. 184.

voyal†, n. Same as viol[1], 2.

V. P. An abbreviation of vice-president.

V-point (vē'point), n. The vertex of two or more diverging lines: as, the V-point of cirrus stripes.

vraisemblance (vrā-soṅ-bloṅs'), n. [F., < vrai, true, + semblance, appearance: see very and semblance, and cf. verisimilitude.] The appearance of truth; verisimilitude.

v. s. In music, an abbreviation of volti subito.

V. S. An abbreviation of veterinary surgeon.

vs. An abbreviation of versus.

V-shaped (vē'shāpt), a. Shaped like the letter V; like the two equal sides of an isosceles triangle; lambdoid.—V-shaped barometric depression, a region of low barometer inclosed by one or more V-shaped isobars, the point of the V, in the northern hemisphere, being usually directed toward the south. V-shaped depressions are often accompanied by characteristic squalls, technically called line-squalls.

v. t. The abbreviation, used in this work, of verb transitive.

V-threaded screw. See screw[1].

V-tool (vē'tōl), n. In joinery and carving, a cutting-tool having the cutting edge in two branches, making an impression like a letter V, a sort of angular gouge.

vue (vū), n. [OF., sight, view: see view.] The sight-opening of a helmet: same as œillère.

vug (vug), n. [Also vugh, vough, vooga; < Corn. vug, vugh, vugga, vooga, etc., a cave, cavern; cf. Corn. fogo, fogou, fou, a cave (= W. ffau, a cave, den), Corn. hugo, googoo, ogoo, ogo (Jago), a cave, W. ogof, gogof, a cave.] In mining, a cavity; a hollow in a rock or in a lode, usually lined with crystals. Vug is the miners' name for that which geologists more generally call a geode.

Quartz is very generally found lining the hollow spaces (vughs) in lodes. R. Hunt, British Mining, p. 486.

vuggy (vug'i), a. [< vug + -y[1].] Of the nature of a vug; containing vugs.

vuider, n. Same as voider.

Vulcan (vul'kan), n. [= F. Vulcain = Sp. Pg. Vulcano = It. Volcano, Vulcano, < L. Vulcanus, Vulcanus, Vulcan, the god of fire; cf. Skt. ulkā, a firebrand. Cf. volcano.] 1. In Rom. myth., the god of fire and the working of metals, and the patron of all handicraftsmen. Originally an independent deity, he became with the advance of time completely identified with the Greek Hephæstus. He was the son of Jupiter and Juno, or of Juno alone, and was born with deformed feet, though according to late myths his lameness came from his having been hurled down from heaven by Jupiter in a fit of anger. He was the divine artist, the creator of all that was beautiful as well as of all that was mechanically wonderful in the abodes of the gods. On earth various volcanoes, as Lemnos and Etna, were held to be his workshops, and the Cyclopes were his journeymen. He had the power of conferring life upon his creations, and was thus the author of Pandora and of the golden dogs of Alcinoüs. In art he was represented as a bearded man, usually with the short sleeveless or one-sleeved tunic (exomis) of the workman, with a conical cap, holding hammer and tongs or other attributes of the smith, and sometimes with indication of his lameness. When Jupiter conceived Minerva in his head, the goddess was delivered full-armed, upon the stroke of an ax in the hands of Vulcan.

2. A hypothetical planet between the sun and the planet Mercury. An object supposed to be a planet was seen crossing the sun's disk on March 26th, 1859. The period of revolution assigned to it was something over 19 days, and its distance from the sun was estimated at about 13,000,000 miles. The existence of Vulcan, however, has not been confirmed (may, indeed, be said to have been practically disproved) by subsequent careful observations.

3†. A volcano.

Also in that Ile is the Mount Ethna, that Men clepen Mount Gybelle; and the Wlcanes, that ben everemore brennynge. Mandeville, Travels, p. 55.

Of those [remarkable things] which are in the Vulcans and mouths of fire at the Indies, worthy doubtlesse to be observed, I will speake in their order.

Acosta, Hist. Indies (tr. by E. Grimston, 1604), iii. 2 [(Hakluyt Soc., I. 105).

Vulcan powder, an explosive consisting of nitroglycerin, sodium nitrate, sulphur, and charcoal.

Vulcanalia (vul-kā-nā'li-ä), n. pl. [L.: see Vulcan.] An ancient Roman festival in honor of Vulcan, celebrated on August 23d with games in the Flaminian circus near the temple of the god, and with sacrifices of fishes. As part of the observance on this day, work was begun by lamplight, in honor of the fire-god.

Vulcanian (vul-kā'ni-an), a. [< L. Volcanius, Vulcanius, < Volcanus, Vulcanus, Vulcan, + -an.] 1. Pertaining to Vulcan, or to works in iron, etc., and occasionally (but not so used by geologists) to volcanoes or volcanic action.

A region of vulcanian activity.

R. A. Proctor, Poetry of Astronomy, p. 228.

2. In geol., pertaining to or designating the system or theory of the Vulcanists, or opponents of Werner.

Vulcanic (vul-kan'ik), a. [= F. vulcanique = Sp. volcánico = Pg. volcanico = It. vulcanico; as Vulcan + -ic. Cf. volcano.] Pertaining or relating to Vulcan or to volcanoes.

Even the burning of a meeting-house, in itself a vulcanic rarity (so long as he was of another parish), could not tickle his outworn palate. Lowell, Study Windows, p. 120.

vulcanicity (vul-ka-nis'i-ti), n. [< vulcanic + -ity.] Same as volcanicity.

This [heat-producing] power, inadequate though it may be to explain the phenomena of vulcanicity.

J. Prestwich, Proc. Roy. Soc., XXXVIII. 425.

The term volcanic action (vulcanism or vulcanicity) embraces all the phenomena connected with the expulsion of heated materials from the interior of the earth to the surface. Encyc. Brit., X. 240.

vulcanisable, vulcanisation, etc. See vulcanizable, etc.

vulcanism (vul'kan-izm), n. [< Vulcan + -ism.] In geol., same as volcanism. The words volcano and volcanic are firmly fixed in English, and the former is in universal and exclusive use among those who speak that language. Hence all the derivatives should be spelled correspondingly: thus, volcanism, volcanicity, volcanology, and not vulcanism, etc.

In the lapse of ages . . . the very roots of former volcanoes have been laid bare, displaying subterranean phases of vulcanism which could not be studied in any modern volcano. Encyc. Brit., X. 240.

Vulcanist (vul'kan-ist), n. [< Vulcan + -ist.] In the early history of geological science, one who supported the Huttonian theory, or who was in opposition to the views of Werner. See Huttonian.

It is sufficient to remark that these systems are usually reduced to two classes, according as they refer the origin of terrestrial bodies to fire or water; and that, conformably to this division, their followers have of late been distinguished by the fanciful names of Vulcanists and Neptunists. To the former of these Dr. Hutton belongs much more than to the latter; though, as he employs the agency both of fire and water in his system, he cannot, in strict propriety, be arranged with either.

Playfair, Illustrations of the Huttonian Theory [(Coll. Works, I. 21).

vulcanite (vul'kan-īt), n. [< Vulcan + -ite[2].] 1. The harder of the two forms of vulcanized india-rubber, the other form being known as soft rubber. Vulcanite differs from soft rubber in that it contains more sulphur, and is cured or vulcanized at a higher temperature. It is of a brownish-black color, is hard and tough, cuts easily, and takes a good polish; it is largely used for making into combs, brooches, bracelets, and many other ornaments. It is not affected by water or by any of the other caoutchouc solvents. As it is especially distinguished by the large quantity of electricity which it evolves when rubbed, it is much used in the construction of electric machines. Also called ebonite.

2. A name sometimes given to pyroxene, from its being found in ejected blocks and lavas.—Vulcanite flask, an iron box closed by screw-bolts, for holding an artificial denture while being vulcanized, to fix the artificial teeth in the vulcanite plate. The flask is heated in a vulcanizing furnace.

vulcanizable (vul'kan-ī-za-bl), a. [< vulcanize + -able.] Capable of being vulcanized; admitting of vulcanization. Also spelled vulcanisable.

vulcanization (vul"kan-i-zā'shon), n. [< vulcanize + -ation.] A method of treating caoutchouc or india-rubber with some form of sulphur, to effect certain changes in its properties, and yield a soft (vulcanized india-rubber) or a hard (vulcanite) product. This was originally effected by dipping the rubber in melted sulphur and heating it to nearly 300°. Several other methods have been employed, probably the best of which for general purposes consists in mechanically mixing the rubber at a moderate heat with flowers of sulphur, and subsequently "curing" it in superheated steam at from 250° to 300° Fahr. The process was invented by Charles Goodyear, who obtained his first patent for it in 1844. Other ingredients, as litharge, white lead, zinc-white, whiting, etc., are added to the sulphur to give color, softness, etc., to the rubber. The substance thus formed possesses the following properties: it remains elastic at all temperatures; it cannot be dissolved by the ordinary solvents, neither is it affected by heat within a considerable range of temperature; finally, it acquires extraordinary powers of resisting compression, with a great increase of strength and elasticity. Vulcanized india-rubber is employed with great success for very many useful purposes, as for waterproofing cloth, for boots, shoes, mats, toys, belting, buffers, wheel-tires, washers, valves, pipes, fire-hose, medical and surgical appliances, etc. Hard vulcanized rubber is known as ebonite or vulcanite. See vulcanite. Also spelled vulcanisation.

vulcanize (vul'kan-īz), v.; pret. and pp. vulcanized, ppr. vulcanizing. [= F. vulcaniser; as Vulcan (with allusion to the melted sulphur of volcanoes) + -ize.] I. trans. To subject to the process of vulcanization, as caoutchouc.—Vulcanized fiber. See fiber[1].—Vulcanized glass, glass cooled by plunging into a bath having a comparatively high temperature. The nature of the bath depends upon the effect desired to be produced.—Vulcanized rubber, caoutchouc incorporated with sulphur and subjected to heat, whereby it combines chemically with the sulphur, and assumes, when cold, a hard consistency resembling that of horn.

II. intrans. To admit of vulcanization.

Rubber vulcanises at 276° Fah.

Sci. Amer., N. S., LXII. 140.

Also spelled vulcanise.

vulcanizer (vul'kan-ī-zėr), n. [< vulcanize + -er[1].] Apparatus used in vulcanizing india-rubber. Also spelled vulcaniser.

vulcano†, n. An old form of volcano.

vulcanological (vul"ka-nō-loj'i-kal), a. Same as volcanological. Nature, XXXVIII. 410.

vulcanology (vul-ka-nol'ō-ji), n. Same as volcanology.

vulg. An abbreviation of vulgar or vulgarly.

Vulg. An abbreviation of Vulgate.

So vulgarly and personally accused. Shak., M. for M., v. 1. 160.

3. Coarsely; rudely; clownishly.

vulgarness (vul′gär-nes), n. The state or character of being vulgar; vulgarity.

vulgate (vul′gāt), a. and n. [I. a. = Sp. vulgado = OIt. vulgato, < L. vulgatus, common, general, ordinary, pp. of vulgare, make common, spread abroad, < vulgus, the common people: see vulgar. II. n. = F. vulgate = It. vulgata, < ML. vulgata, sc. editio, the common edition, fem. of L. vulgatus, common: see I.] I. a. 1. Common; general; popular.

In this, the vulgate text [of "Perse" of Æschylus], the word ἐκαψ̓ζοίατο might not itself arouse suspicion. Amer. Jour. Philol., IX. 321.

2. [cap.] Of or pertaining to the Vulgate, or old Latin version of the Scriptures.

II. n. [cap.] 1. The Latin version of the Scriptures accepted as the authorized version of the Roman Catholic Church. It was prepared by Jerome about the close of the fourth century, partly by translation from the original, partly by revision of prior Latin versions. The Vulgate gradually came into general use between the sixth and the ninth century. The Anglo-Saxon translations were made from it and Wyclif's English version, while other English versions from Tyndale's onward have been much influenced by it. The Vulgate was the first book printed (about 1455). The Council of Trent ordered that the "old and vulgate edition," approved by the "usage of so many ages," should be the only Latin version used in "public lectures, disputations, sermons, and expositions." Authorized editions were afterward published under Sixtus V. in 1590 and Clement VIII. in 1592–3. The latter, or Clementine edition, is the present accepted standard of the Roman Catholic Church, and is the basis of the Douay Bible. The religious terminology of the languages of western Europe has been in great part derived from or influenced by the Vulgate.

2. The vulgar or popular tongue; the vernacular. [Rare.]

"Here's a pretty mess," returned the pompous gentleman, descending to the vulgate; "you threaten me, forsooth!" J. E. Cooke, Virginia Comedians, I. xiii.

vulgus (vul′gus), n. [L. vulgus, the common people: see vulgar.] See the quotation.

Now be it known unto all you boys who are at schools which do not rejoice in the time-honoured institution of the Vulgus (commonly supposed to have been established by William of Wykeham at Winchester, and imported to Rugby by Arnold, more for the sake of the lines which were learnt by heart with it than for its own intrinsic value, as I've always understood), that it is a short exercise, in Greek or Latin verse, on a given subject, the minimum number of lines being fixed for each form. T. Hughes, Tom Brown at Rugby, ii. 3.

vuln (vuln), v. t. [< OF. vulnerer*, < L. vulnerare, wound: see vulnerate.] To wound: in heraldry, especially said of the pelican, which is blazoned as vulning herself when represented as tearing her breast to feed her young. Compare pelican in her piety, under pelican.

When in the profile she [the pelican in heraldry] is usually vulning herself. Encyc. Brit., XI. 701.

vulned (vulnd), a. [< vuln + -ed[2].] In her., wounded: noting any animal used as a bearing, the weapon which inflicts the wound being generally mentioned. Frequently, however, vulned refers to the bleeding of the wound: thus, the blazon may be pierced by an arrow and vulned.

A Pelican with wings expanded argent, Vulned Proper. Guillim, Heraldry (1724), p. 224.

vulnera, n. Plural of vulnus.

vulnerability (vul″ne-ra-bil′i-ti), n. [< vulnerable + -ity (see -bility).] The state or property of being vulnerable; vulnerableness.

vulnerable (vul′ne-ra-bl), a. [< F. vulnérable = Sp. vulnerable = Pg. vulneravel = It. vulnerabile, < LL. vulnerabilis, wounding, injurious, < L. vulnerare, wound, hurt: see vulnerate.] 1†. Capable of wounding; dangerous. [Rare.]

The male children practise to ride great horses, to throw the vulnerable and inevitable darte. Ambassy of Sir R. Sherley (1609). (Davies.)

2. Capable of being wounded; susceptible of wounds or injuries, literally or figuratively.

Let fall thy blade on vulnerable crests. Shak., Macbeth, v. 8. 11.

It is the middle compound character which alone is vulnerable: the man who, without firmness enough to avoid a dishonorable action, has feeling enough to be ashamed of it. Junius, to Sir W. Draper, March 3, 1769.

The hat is the vulnerable part of the artificial integument. O. W. Holmes, Autocrat, viii.

vulnerableness (vul′ne-ra-bl-nes), n. Vulnerability.

vulnerary (vul′ne-rā-ri), a. and n. [= F. vulnéraire = Sp. Pg. It. vulnerario, < L. vulnerarius, of or pertaining to wounds, < vulnus (vulner-), a wound: see vulnerate.] I. a. 1†. Causing wounds. [Rare.]

The aspect of his eye alone does sometimes become not only vulnerary, but mortal. Feltham, Resolves, ii. 56.

2. Useful in healing wounds; adapted to the cure of external injuries: as, vulnerary plants or potions.

Her aunt sought in their baggage for some vulnerary remedy. Scott, Quentin Durward, xv.

The plant [henna] is further credited with the possession of vulnerary and astringent properties. Encyc. Brit., XI. 654.

II. n.; pl. vulneraries (-riz). A remedy applied to wounds to favor their healing.

Like a balsamic vulnerary. V. Knox, Christian Philosophy, § 38.

vulnerate† (vul′ne-rāt), v. t. [< L. vulneratus, pp. of vulnerare (> It. vulnerare = Sp. Pg. vulnerar = OF. vulnerer*), wound, injure, < vulnus (vulner-), a wound; cf. Skt. vrana, a wound, fracture; prob. from the root of vellere, perf. vulsi, pluck, tear: see vulture.] To wound; hurt; injure.

Rather murder me than vulnerate still your creature, unless you mean to medicine where you have hurt. Shirley, Love Tricks, iii. 5.

vulneration† (vul-ne-rā′shon), n. [= F. vulnération = Sp. vulneración = Pg. vulneração, < L. vulneratio(n-), a wounding, an injury, < vulnerare, wound: see vulnerate.] The act of wounding, or the state of being wounded.

He speaks of the Son of God, which was to be the Son of Man, and by our nature liable to vulneration. Bp. Pearson, On the Creed, iv.

vulnerose (vul′ne-rōs), a. [= It. vulneroso, < L. vulnus (vulner-), a wound, + -ose.] Full of wounds; having wounds; wounded.

vulnific (vul-nif′ik), a. [< L. vulnificus, wound-making, < vulnus, a wound, + facere, make (see -fic).] Causing wounds; inflicting wounds. Bailey, 1731. [Rare.]

vulnifical (vul-nif′i-kal), a. [< vulnific + -al.] Same as vulnific.

vulnus (vul′nus), n.; pl. vulnera (-ne-rä). [L.] A wound.—Vitis vulnus, the wound-gall of the grape. See vine-gall.—Vulnus sclopeticum, a gunshot-wound: technical in military and naval surgery.

Vulpecula cum Ansere (vul-pek′ū-lä kum an′se-rē). [L.: vulpecula, dim. of vulpes, a fox; cum, with; anser, abl. of anser, goose.] A constellation, the Fox with the Goose, first appearing in the "Prodromus Astronomiæ" of Hevelius, 1690. It lies between the Eagle and the Swan, and is generally called Vulpecula. It has one star of the fourth magnitude.

vulpecular (vul-pek′ū-lär), a. [< L. vulpecula, a little fox, dim. of vulpes, a fox: see Vulpes.] Of the nature of a fox; vulpine; of or pertaining to a fox's whelp.

Vulpes (vul′pēz), n. [NL. (Brisson, 1756), < L. vulpes, volpes, also vulpis, a fox; cf. Gr. ἀλώπηξ, a fox.] A genus of foxes, giving name to the Vulpinæ, whose type species is the common red fox, Canis vulpes of earlier naturalists, now Vulpes vulgaris, of Europe. All the vulpine quadrupeds have been placed in this genus, which, however, is now restricted by the exclusion of such forms as Urocyon (the gray foxes of America), Otocyon or Megalotis of Africa, and Nyctereutes of Japan. Even with these restrictions there are numerous species, of Europe, Asia, Africa, and North America (none in South America), closely related to the common fox; as well as the more different types represented by the African fennec (Vulpes (Fennecus) zerda), the Asiatic corsac (V. corsac), the North American kit (V. velox), and the circumpolar isatis, or arctic fox (V. lagopus). See cuts under arctic, cross-fox, fennec, fox, and kit-fox.

vulpicide[1] (vul′pi-sīd), n. [< L. vulpes, a fox, + -cīda, < cædere, kill.] A fox-killer.

vulpicide[2] (vul′pi-sīd), n. [< L. vulpes, a fox, + -cidium, < cædere, kill.] The killing of a fox or of foxes.

Vulpicide, committed in defence of property, and condemned neither by religion, nor by equity, nor by any law save that of sportsmen, excites an anger that cries aloud for positive penalties.

H. Spencer, Study of Sociol., p. 245.

Vulpinæ (vul-pī′nē), n. pl. [NL., < Vulpes + -inæ.] A subfamily of Canidæ, represented by the genus Vulpes in a broad sense, containing the foxes as distinguished from the dogs, wolves, and jackals; the alopecoid canines. The frontal region of the skull is comparatively low from lack of frontal sinuses, and the pupil of the eye usually contracts to a vertical elliptical figure. But the group is not sharply delimited from Caninæ, as the South American fox-wolves (see Pseudalopex) and some African forms (see Thous) connect the two. See Urocyon (with cut), Vulpes (with cuts there cited), and compare Megalotinæ.

vulpinate†, v. i. "To play the fox"; deceive with crafty wiles or deceits. Blount, 1670.

vulpine (vul′pin), a. [= F. vulpin = Sp. vulpino = It. volpino, volpigno, < L. vulpinus, of or pertaining to a fox, < vulpes, a fox: see Vulpes.] 1. Of or pertaining to a fox; technically, resembling the fox as a member of the Vulpinæ; related to the foxes; alopecoid: distinguished from lupine or thooïd.

Sometimes I heard the foxes as they ranged over the snow crust, in moonlight nights. . . . Sometimes one came near to my window, attracted by my light, barked a vulpine curse at me, and then retreated.

Thoreau, Walden, p. 293.

2. Resembling a fox in traits or disposition; also, characteristic of the fox; foxy; cunning; crafty.

The slyness of a vulpine craft. Feltham, Resolves, i. 12.

Smooth vulpine determination. Kingsley, Hypatia, xiv.

Vulpine opossum, phalanger, or phalangist, Phalangista (now Trichosurus) vulpinus, also called brush-tailed Vulpine Phalanger (Trichosurus vulpinus).

opossum, somewhat resembling a fox, native of Australia, about 2 feet long, with long, hairy, and prehensile tail, and of arboreal habits like other phalangers.—Vulpine series, the alopecoid series of canines.

vulpinism (vul′pi-nizm), n. [< vulpine + -ism.] The property of being vulpine; craft; artfulness; cunning. Carlyle.

vulpinite (vul′pi-nīt), n. [< Vulpino (see def.) + -ite[2].] A scaly granular variety of the mineral anhydrite. It occurs at Vulpino in Italy, and is sometimes employed for small statues and other ornamental work under the name of marino bardiglio.

vulsella (vul-sel′ä), n. [Also volsella; < L. vulsella, volsella, vulsilla, pincers, < vellere, pp. vulsus, pluck: cf. vulture.] 1. Pl. vulsellæ (-ē). A forceps; specifically, a forceps, usually with toothed or claw-like blades, used for grasping and holding any of the tissues, and also for removing foreign bodies lodged in the throat or other passages. Also vulsella forceps.—2. [cap.] [NL. (Lamarck, 1799).] A genus of monomyarian bivalves, containing such as V. lingulata of East Indian seas.

Vulsella lingulata.

vulsellum (vul-sel′um), n.; pl. vulsella (-ä). [NL.] Same as vulsella, 1.

The greater part of the growth was severed by working the écraseur, and removed through the mouth with a vulsellum.

Lancet, 1889, I. 1032.

vultern†, n. An old spelling of vulturn.

Vultur (vul′tėr), n. [NL.: see vulture.] A Linnean genus of Falconidæ, variously defined. (a†) Including all the vultures of both hemispheres. (b) Restricted to certain Old World vultures, as V. monachus.

vulture (vul′tūr), n. [< ME. vultur, voltur, voutur, voutre, < OF. voutour, voltour, vouteur, F. vautour = Pr. voltor, voutor = Sp. buitre = Pg. abutre = OIt. voltore, It. avoltore, avoltojo = W. ffwltur, < L. vultur, voltur, OL. also vulturus, volturus, also vulturius, volturius, a vulture, a bird of prey, lit. 'plucker,' < vellere (perf. vulsi), pluck: see vellicate, and cf. vulnerate.] 1. One of sundry large birds, of the order Raptores, which have the head and neck more or less bare of feathers, the beak and claws less powerful than in most birds of prey, and which feed largely or wholly upon carrion. They for the most part inhabit warm countries. Birds of this description are found both in the Old World and in the New; and, misled by superficial appearances and general habits, naturalists have applied the name to members of different suborders. (a) The Old World vultures, which, in spite of their peculiar outward aspect, are so little different from ordinary hawks and eagles that they can at most be considered as a subfamily Vulturinæ of the family Falconidæ. Of these there are several genera and numerous species, inhabiting the warmer parts of Europe, Asia, and Africa, where they act as efficient scavengers to clear the earth of offal and carcasses, which would otherwise become offensive. The cinereous or brown vulture, Vultur monachus or V. cinereus, is a typical example; it inhabits all countries bordering the Mediterranean, and extends thence to India and China. The griffin-vultures are species of Gyps. The Bengal vulture, inhabiting India, is Pseudogyps bengalensis. Related species are the Angola vulture, Gypohierax angolensis (see cut under Gypohierax), the immense Otogyps auricularis, of Africa (see Otogyps), and Lophogyps occipitalis. The Egyptian vulture, quite unlike any of the foregoing, is Neophron percnopterus, often called Pharaoh's hen (see cut under Neophron). The bearded vulture of the Alps, etc., or the lammergeier, Gypaëtus barbatus, has the head feathered, and does not hesitate to attack living animals; this is the connecting-link between vultures and hawks or eagles, being sometimes placed in Vulturinæ, sometimes in Falconinæ. (See cut under Gypaëtus.) (b) The American vultures of the suborder Cathartides. The species of this group with which the name vulture is specifically connected are the urubu, or black vulture, Catharista atrata; the turkey-buzzard or turkey-vulture, Cathartes aura; and the king-vulture, Sarcorhamphus papa: the condor usually keeps its own distinctive name. See Cathartidæ, and cuts under condor, king-vulture, turkey-buzzard, and urubu.

Brown Vulture (Vultur monachus).

Whos stomak fowles tyren everemo,
That hyghten volturis, as bookes telle.

Chaucer, Troilus, i. 788.

2. Figuratively, one who or that which resembles a vulture, especially in rapacity or in the thirst for prey.

Ye dregs of baseness, vultures amongst men,
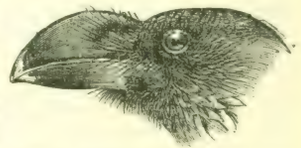
That tire upon the hearts of generous spirits!

Beau. and Fl., Honest Man's Fortune, ii. 1.



Here am I, bound upon this pillared rock, Prey to the vulture of a vast desire That feeds upon my life. O. W. Holmes, Regrets.

Let Austria's vulture have food for her beak.

Whittier, From Perugia.

Abyssinian vulture, the Lophogyps occipitalis, in which the head is not bare, the bill is red, with black tip and blue base, the feet are flesh-color, the eyes brown, and the length is nearly 3 feet. It inhabits much of Africa, and was first described by Latham in 1821.—Arabian vulture, the brown or cinereous vulture, Vultur monachus. Latham, 1781.—Ash-colored vulture, the Egyptian vulture. Latham, 1781.—Bearded vulture. See def. 1 (a).—Bengal vulture. See def. 1 (a). Latham, 1781.—Black vulture. (a) See def. 1 (b). (b) The Vultur monachus. Latham, 1781.—Brown vulture. See def. 1 (a).—Californian vulture, the Californian condor. See cut under condor.—Changoun vulture, the Bengal vulture: so called by Latham, 1801, after le changoun of Levaillant, 1799.—Cinereous vulture. See def. 1 (a). Latham, 1781.—Crane-vulture. See secretary-bird.—Crested or coped black vulture, the brown or cinereous vulture, Vultur monachus. Edwards, 1760.—Eagle-vulture, the West African Gypohierax angolensis. Also called vulturine sea-eagle. See cut under Gypohierax.—Eared vulture, a vulture of the genus Otogyps, specifically O. auricularis.—Egyptian vulture. See def. 1 (a).—Fulvous vulture, one of the griffin-vultures, Gyps fulvus. Latham, 1781.—Gingi vulture, Neophron gingianus, the Indian representative of the Egyptian vulture. Latham, 1787 and 1821.—Indian vulture, one of the griffin-vultures, Gyps indicus, of the Indian and Malayan peninsulas, Burma, and Siam.—King of the vultures, the king-vulture. See def. 1 (b). Edwards, 1743.—Maltese vulture, the Egyptian vulture. Latham, 1781.—Nubian vulture, one of the eared vultures, Otogyps auricularis.—Pileated vulture, Neophron pileatus, the South African representative of the Egyptian vulture, first described as Vultur pileatus by Burchell in 1824.—Pondicherry vulture, one of the eared vultures, Otogyps calvus.—Rachamah vulture, the Egyptian vulture. Bruce, 1790.—Rüppell's vulture, one of the griffin-vultures, Gyps rueppelli.—Sacred vulture, a bird described by William Bartram in 1791, under the name of Vultur sacra, as inhabiting Florida. It has not been identified, but is supposed to be the king-vulture, Sarcorhamphus papa.—The vulture†, the fulvous vulture, Gyps fulvus. Albin, 1740.—Turkey-vulture. See turkey-buzzard, and cut under Cathartes.—White vulture, the Egyptian vulture.

vulture-raven (vul′tūr-rā″vn), n. A book-name of the thick-billed African ravens, of the genus Corvultur, C. albicollis and C. crassirostris. They are noted for the stoutness and especially the depth of the bill, resulting from the strong convexity of the high-arched culmen, like that of a bird of prey. C. albicollis is 18 inches long, with the bill 3 inches along the culmen; the plumage is glossy-black, with concealed white on the neck; the beak is dark-brown, with the tips of the mandibles whitish; the feet are brownish-black, the irides hazel-brown. This species is South African. C. crassirostris, of northeastern Africa, is larger, being 2 feet long, with the beak nearly 4 inches. The former species was originally described by Latham as the South Sea raven, and later by Levaillant as the corbivau (whence the generic name Corvultur imposed by Lesson in 1831); another synonym is Corvus vulturinus.

Head of Vulture-raven (Corvultur albicollis), reduced.

Vulturidæ (vul-tū′ri-dē), n. pl. [NL., < L. vultur, a vulture (see vulture), + -idæ.] A family of birds, artificially composed of the birds popularly called vultures in both hemispheres. There are no good characters to distinguish the Old World vultures from the family Falconidæ, of which they may at most form a subfamily Vulturinæ, while, on the other hand, there are strong characters separating the American vultures from all others. The family has in consequence been nearly abandoned by ornithologists, or at least restricted to the Old World vultures. See vulture.

Vulturinæ (vul-tū-rī′nē), n. pl. [NL., < Vultur + -inæ.] A subfamily of Falconidæ, confined to the Old World, and consisting of the vultures of Europe, Asia, and Africa, characterized chiefly by their naked heads and carrion-feeding habits. See vulture.

vulturine (vul′tūr-in), a. [< L. vulturinus, of or pertaining to a vulture, < vultur, a vulture: see vulture.] 1. Resembling a vulture; of or pertaining to the Vulturinæ.—2. Characteristic of a vulture, as in scenting carrion. Also vulturish.

The vulturine nose, which smells nothing but corruption, is no credit to its possessor.

Kingsley, Two Years Ago, x.

Vulturine eagle, Aquila verreauxi, of Lesson, described also the same year (1830) as Aquila vulturina by Sir A. Smith. This is an African eagle, 3 feet long, with the feet feathered to the toes, and otherwise congeneric with the golden eagle. When adult it is black, more or less extensively white on the back, rump, and upper tail-coverts.

the cere and toes are yellow, the eyes are umber-brown, and the beak is horn-color.—Vulturine guinea-fowl, the naked-necked guinea-fowl, Acryllium vulturinum. This is a remarkable form, with the head and upper part of the neck nearly bare, like a vulture's, the lower neck, the breast, and fore back plumaged with very long discrete lance-linear feathers of black, white, and blue color; the narrow acuminate middle tail-feathers long-exserted; the general plumage black, spotted with white; the lower breast light-blue; and the flanks purple, ocellated with black and white. This guinea-fowl inhabits Madagascar as well as various parts of continental Africa.—Vulturine raven, the vulture-raven.—Vulturine sea-eagle, an occasional erroneous name of the Angola vulture of West Africa. See cut under Gypohierax.

vulturish (vul'tūr-ish), a. [< vulture + -ish[1].] Same as vulturine, 2.

> Hawkish, aquiline, not to say vulturish.
> Carlyle, Misc., IV. 245. (Davies.)

vulturism (vul'tūr-izm), n. [< vulture + -ism.] Vulturine character or quality; rapacity. Carlyle.

vulturn (vul'tėrn), n. [Arbitrary var. of vulture, appar. through vulturine.] The brush-turkey of Australia, Talegallus lathami: so named from the nakedness of the head suggesting a vulture. See cut under Talegallus.

vulturous (vul'tūr-us), a. [< vulture + -ous.] Like or characteristic of a vulture.

> Such gawks (Gecken) are they, and foolish peacocks, and yet with such a vulturous hunger for self-indulgence.
> Carlyle, Sartor Resartus, ii. 4.

vulvar (vul'vär), a. [< vulva + -ar[3].] Of or pertaining to the vulva; vulviform.—Vulvar canal. Same as vulva, 2.—Vulvar enterocele. (a) A vaginal hernia protruding through the vulva. (b) A hernia which has descended between the ramus of the ischium and the vagina into one of the labia majora; pudendal enterocele or hernia.—Vulvar hernia. Same as vulvar enterocele.

vulvate (vul'vāt), a. [< vulva + -ate[1].] Shaped like or formed into a vulva; vulvar; vulviform.

vulviform (vul'vi-fôrm), a. [< L. vulva, womb, + forma, form: see form.] 1. In zoöl., shaped like the vulva of the human female; oval, with raised lips and a median cleft.—2. In bot., like a cleft with projecting edges.

vulvismus (vul-vis'mus), n. [NL., < L. vulva, vulva.] Same as vaginismus.

vulvitis (vul-vī'tis), n. [NL., < L. vulva + -itis.] Inflammation of the vulva.

vulvo-uterine (vul-vō-ū'tę-rin), a. Of or pertaining to the vulva and the uterus: as, the vulvo-uterine canal (the vagina).

vulvovaginal (vul-vō-vaj'i-nal), a. Pertaining to the vulva and the vagina.—Vulvovaginal canal. Same as vagina.—Vulvovaginal glands, the glands of Bartholin or odoriferous glands in the female, corresponding to Cowper's glands in the male. See gland.

vulvovaginitis (vul-vō-vaj-i-nī'tis), n. [NL., < vulva + vagina + -itis.] Inflammation of both the vulva and the vagina.

vum (vum), v. i. A corruption or equivalent of vow, used in the expression "I vum," a mild expletive or oath. Compare swan[2]. [New Eng.]

> The Deacon swore (as Deacons do,
> With an "I dew vum," or an "I tell yeou").
> O. W. Holmes, Deacon's Masterpiece.

V-vat (vē'vat), n. In mining, a pointed or V-shaped box in which crushed or pulverized ores are sized or classified by the aid of water. The earthy particles mingled with the ore entering above fall against a current of water rising from beneath, the velocity of which is regulated so that a more or less complete separation of the ore from the gangue is effected. These boxes are generally arranged in a series of four or more, and there are many varieties of the apparatus, of which the general principle was the invention of Von Rittinger, an Austrian metallurgist. This method has proved to be of great value in ore-dressing. Also called pointed box, pyramidal box, and spitzkasten.

v. y. An abbreviation in book-catalogues of various years.

vyce†, n. An obsolete spelling of vise[1].

vying (vī'ing), p. a. [Ppr. of vie[1], v.] Competing; emulating.

vyingly (vī'ing-li), adv. Emulously. Encyc. Dict.

vyne†, n. An obsolete spelling of vine.

vyner†, n. An obsolete spelling of viner[1], viner[2].

vyre†, n. An obsolete spelling of vire[1].

vysar†, n. An obsolete spelling of vizor.

★ W, 1. The twenty-third letter and eighteenth consonant-sign in the English alphabet. It has a double value, as consonant and as vowel. As an alphabetic character it is of very modern date, being one of the four that have sprung from the Y or V added by the Greeks to the older Phenician alphabet, and one of the three (U, V, W) that have grown out of the Roman form of that character (see U). It was made (as pointed out under U) by doubling the U- or V-sign (hence called double U), in order to distinguish properly the semivowel sound w from the spirant v and the vowel u. It was formerly often printed as two V's, VV, vv. It began to be used in the eleventh century, and gradually crowded out the special sign for the same sound which the Anglo-Saxon alphabet had possessed. The alphabetic sound distinctively represented by w is the labial semivowel, which stands in precisely the same relation to oo (ō) in which consonantal y stands to ee (ē). Each of these semivowels, if not of precisely the same mode of production with the corresponding vowel, is at any rate only very slightly different from it; w is virtually an oo which is abbreviated into a mere prefix to another vowel, a close position from which the organs by opening reach another vowel-sound; and a prolonged w is an oo. On the other hand, the semivowel w (like the semivowel y) can be only very imperfectly and indistinctly uttered after a vowel, and our w in that position is but another way of writing u; it is found only in the combinations aw, ew, ow, which are equivalent to au, eu, ou; and as so used it could disappear from the language without any loss, but rather with profit. The semivowel sound w (including wh and qu, which is a way of writing kw: see under Q) is a not uncommon element of English utterance, being about 2½ per cent. of it (a little less than the spirant v). In many languages — for example, in all those that are descended from the Latin — the semivowel w tends to pass over into the spirant v-sound, and hence the spirant value of our v, which was the representative in Latin of the w-sound. In Anglo-Saxon a w stood and was pronounced also before r (and in a few words before l); in such words as write, wring, the character is retained, though the sound is lost. In Anglo-Saxon, also, the w was in many words pronounced with a preceding aspiration, the relic of an original prefixed guttural mute, and it was consistently and properly so written: for example, hwīt, white, hwǣr, where. In modern English the h has by an odd and unaccountable caprice had its place in writing changed to after the w (perhaps by analogy with the similar blunder shown in writing rh in Latin for the Greek aspirated r, or hr, or by a blind conformity with the frequent initial digraphs th, ph, sh). There is dispute among phonetists at present as to the true character of this wh-sound, some maintaining that it is not a w with preceding aspiration, but a surd counterpart to w, standing related to it as, for example, an f to a v, or an s to a z. This view rests in part, probably, on some actual difference of utterance, but in part also on unfamiliarity with the real wh; for in England the aspiration is now very generally omitted, and when, white, etc., are pronounced as wen, wite, etc. It admits of no question, however, that when, for example, is related to hoo-en precisely as wen to oo-en, the difference in each case consisting in an aspiration prefixed respectively to the vowel and semivowel — just as, correspondingly, hew (which shows an h prefixed to the English "long u" sound, or yoo) is related to hē-oo precisely as ewe to ē-oo: the h being here, as everywhere else (see H), uttered through the same position of the mouth-organs as the following sound. W is sometimes silent, not only as initial before r (see above), but elsewhere, as in two, sword, answer, etc. It is never doubled. The assimilating influence of a w (whether written with w or with u in the combination qu) in a following a-sound is very marked, giving the a in many words the short sound of o (o), as in what, squad, etc., or the broad sound of a (à), as in war, quart, thwart, etc.

2. As a symbol: (a) In chem., the symbol for tungsten (NL. wolframium). (b) [l. c.] In hydrodynamics, the symbol for the component of the velocity parallel to the axis of Z. — 3. Then she could stand alone; nay, by the rood,
She could have run and waddled all about.
Shak., R. and J., i. 3. 37.

Every member waddled home as fast as his short legs could carry him, wheezing as he went with corpulency and terror. Irving, Knickerbocker, p. 437.

=Syn. Waddle, Toddle. Waddling is a kind of ungainly walking produced by the great weight or natural clumsiness of the walker; toddling is the movement of a child in learning to walk.

II. trans. To tread down by wading or waddling through, as high grass. [Rare.]

They tread and waddle all the goodly grass.
Drayton, Moon-Calf.

waddle[1] (wod'l), n. [< waddle[1], v.] The act of walking with a swaying or rocking motion from side to side; a clumsy, rocking gait, with short steps; a toddle.

waddle[2] (wod'l), n. and v. A dialectal form of wattle.

waddle[3] (wod'l), n. [Perhaps a perverted form of wannel*, < wane[1], v.] The wane of the moon. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

waddler (wod'lėr), n. [< waddle[1] + -er[1].] One who or that which waddles.

waddling (wod'ling), n. [Verbal n. of waddle[2].] A wattled fence. [Prov. Eng.]

To arbor begun and quicksetted about,
No poling nor wadling till set be far out.
Tusser, Husbandrie, p. 83. (Davies.)

waddlingly (wod'ling-li), adv. With a waddling gait.

waddy (wad'i), n.; pl. waddies (-iz). [Prob. native Australian: by some thought to be a corruption of E. wood.] 1. A war-club of heavy wood, grooved in such a way that the edges of the grooves serve as cutting edges to increase the efficacy of the blow: Australian.

In battle, a blow from a waddy lays low a companion.
H. Spencer, Prin. of Sociol., § 78.

Hence—2. A walking-stick. [Australia.]

wade (wād), v.; pret. and pp. waded, ppr. wading. [< ME. waden (pret. waded, earlier wod, pp. waden*), < AS. wadan (pret. wōd, pl. wōdon, pp. waden), go, move, advance, trudge, also wade, = OFries. wada = D. waden = OHG. watan, MHG. waten, G. waten, wade, ford, = Icel. vadha = Dan. vade = Sw. vada, wade, = L. vadere, go. Hence ult. waddle[1]. From the L. vadere come E. evade, invade, pervade, etc.] I. intrans. 1. To walk through any substance that impedes the free motion of the limbs; move by stepping through a fluid or other semi-resisting medium: as, to wade through water; to wade through sand or snow.

She waded through the dirt to pluck him off me.
Shak., T. of the S., iv. 1. 80.

2†. To enter in; penetrate.

Whan myght is joyned unto crueltee,
Allas, to depe wol the venym wade.
Chaucer, Monk's Tale, l. 504.

3. To move or pass with difficulty or labor, real or apparent; make way against hindrances or embarrassments, as depth, obscurity, or resistance, material or mental.

In many an unkouth, glad, and deepe matere.
Chaucer, Troilus, ii. 150.

Dangerous it were for the feeble brain of man to wade far into the doings of the Most High.
Hooker, Eccles. Polity, i. 2.

I lament what he [Mr. Fox] must wade through to real power, if ever he should arrive there.
Walpole, Letters, II. 494.

Wading birds, the waders; Grallæ or Grallatores.

II. trans. To pass or cross by wading; ford: as, to wade a stream.

Then the three Gods waded the river.
William Morris, Sigurd, ii.

wade (wād), n. [< wade, v.; in def. 2 = wadde = Icel. vad, a ford.] 1. The act of wading: as, a wade in a brook.—2. A place where wading is done; a ford. [Colloq.]

It was a wade of fully a mile, and every now and then the water just touched the ponies' bellies.
The Field, April 4, 1885. (Encyc. Dict.)

3. A road. See the quotation.

The word wade, properly a ford, is used here to signify a road, and not merely the crossing of water. It is, I believe, extinct as a noun, though it survives as a verb.
A. H. A. Hamilton, Quarter Sessions, p. 271.

wader (wā'dėr), n. [< wade + -er[1].] 1. One who or that which wades.

I saw where James
Made toward us, like a wader in the surf,
Beyond the brook, waist-deep in meadow-sweet.
Tennyson, The Brook.

2. In ornith., any bird belonging to the old order Grallæ or Grallatores, comprising a great number of long-legged wading birds, as distinguished from those water-birds which have short legs and webbed feet and habitually swim. The order has been broken up, or much modified; but wader is conveniently applied to such birds as cranes, herons, storks, ibises, plovers, snipes, sandpipers, and rails.

3. High water-proof boots worn by fishermen or sportsmen in general for wading through water.

An ardent votary of fly and bank-fishing, with waders and a two-handed rod.
Fortnightly Rev., N. S., XLIII. 632.

wadge (waj), v. A dialectal form of wage. Halliwell.

wad-hook (wod'hůk), n. A ramrod fitted with a wormer, for extracting wads from a gun; also, the wormer of such a rod.

Wadhurst clay. In Eng. geol., a division of the Wealden.

wadi, wady (wod'i), n. [< Ar. wādī, a ravine, hence, a river-channel, river. This word appears in several Spanish river-names—namely, Guadalquivir (Wādī-'l-kebīr, 'the great river'), Guadalaxara, Guadalupe, Guadiana, etc.] The channel of a watercourse which is dry except in the rainy season; a watercourse; a stream: a term used chiefly in the topography of certain Eastern countries.

The real wady is, generally speaking, a rocky valley, bisected by the bed of a mountain torrent, dry during the hot season. R. F. Burton, El-Medinah, p. 100.

wadmal† (wod'mal), n. [Also wadmoll, wadmolle, and irreg. wadmeal, woadmel, and (representing Icel.) wadmaal; < Icel. vadhmāl (= Dan. vadmel = Sw. vadmal), a woolen stuff, < vadhr*, cloth (see wad[1]), + māl, a measure.] A thick woolen cloth.

Yron, Wooll, Wadmolle, Gotefell, Ridfell also.
Hakluyt's Voyages, I. 188.

Woadmel. A coarse hairy stuff, made of Iceland wool, and brought from thence by our seamen to Norfolk and Suffolk. Grose, Prov. Gloss.

Her upper garment . . . was of a coarse dark-colored stuff called wadmaal, then [early in the eighteenth century] much used in the Zetland islands. Scott, Pirate, v.

wadmiltilt (wod'mil-tilt), n. [< wadmil*, wadmal, + tilt[2].] A strong rough woolen cloth employed to cover powder-barrels and to protect ammunition.

wad-punch (wod'punch), n. A kind of wad-cutter.

wadset (wod'set), n. [Also wadsett; < wad[2] + set[1], stake.] In Scots law, a mortgage, or bond and disposition in security.

And the rental book, Jeanie—clear three hunder sterling—deil a wadset, heritable band, or burden.
Scott, Heart of Mid-Lothian, xxvi.

wadsetter (wod'set-ėr), n. [< wadset + -er[1].] In Scots law, one who holds by a wadset; a mortgagee.

wady, n. See wadi.

wae[1] (wā), n. and a. [An obs. or dial. (Sc.) form of woe.] I. n. Woe.

My sheep beene wasted (wae is me therefore!).
Spenser, Shep. Cal., September.

He aft has wrought me meikle wae.
Burns, Oh lay thy loof in mine.

II. a. Woeful; sorrowful.

And wae and sad fair Annie sat,
And drearie was her sang.
Fair Annie (Child's Ballads, III. 196).

That year I was the waest man
O' ony man alive.
Burns, Election Ballads.

wae[2]†, n. Same as waw[1].

waeful (wā'fůl), a. A dialectal (Scotch) form of woeful.

With waefo wae I hear zour plaint.
Gil Morrice (Child's Ballads, II. 38).

waeness (wā'nes), n. [< wae[1] + -ness.] Sadness. [Scotch.]

A feeling of thankfulness, of waeness and great gladness. Carlyle, in Froude, Life in London, iv.

waesome (wā'sum), adv. A dialectal (Scotch) form of woesome.

She kend her lot would be a waesome ane, but it was of her own framing, sae she desired the less pity.
Scott, Heart of Mid-Lothian, xliv.

waesucks, interj. [< wae[1] + sucks*, perhaps a vague variation of sakes as used in exclamation.] Alas! [Scotch.]

Waesucks! for him that gets nae lass.
Burns, Holy Fair.

waf[1], a. See waff[2].

waf[2]†. An obsolete preterit of weave[1].

wafer (wā'fėr), n. [< ME. wafre, wafoure = ★OF. waufre, gaufre, goffre (ML. guafra), F. gaufre (Walloon wafe, waufe), < MD. waefel, D. wafel (> E. waffle) = LG. wafel = G. wabe, a honeycomb, cake of wax; cf. Dan. vaffel = Sw. våffla, wafer (< LG.?): see waffle, and cf. gauffer, goffer, and gopher, from the mod. F.] A thin cake or leaf of paste, generally disk-shaped. Specifically—(a†) A cake, apparently corresponding to the modern waffle, and, like it, served hot.

For ar [ere] I haue bred of mele, ofte mote I swete.
And ar the comune haue corne ynough, many a colde mornynge;
So, ar my wafres ben ywrouȝt, moche wo I tholye.
Piers Plowman (B), xiii. 263.

Wafres pipyng hot out of the gleede [fire].
Chaucer, Miller's Tale, l. 193.

(b) A small and delicate cake or biscuit, usually sweetened, variously flavored, and sometimes rolled up.

Thy lips, with age, as any wafer thin.
Drayton, Idea, viii.

She should say grace to every bit of meat,
And gape no wider than a wafer's thickness.
B. Jonson, Case is Altered, ii. 3.

(c) A thin circular disk of unleavened bread used in the celebration of the eucharist in the Roman Catholic Church and in many Anglican churches. The wafer derives its form from the fact that the Passover bread of the Jews was ordinarily in this shape; and both the ancient pictured representations and the references in the early patristic literature confirm the opinion that this was the form in use in the church from the apostolic days. Wafers are usually stamped with the form of a cross, crucifix, or Agnus Dei, with the initials I. H. S. (Jesus Hominum Salvator), or sometimes with a monogram representing the name of Christ. See altar-bread, and oblate, n., 2.

The usuall bread and wafer, hitherto named singing cakes, which served for the use of the private Masse.
Abp. Parker, Injunctions (1559), quoted in N. and Q., 7th ser., V. 211.

(d) A thin disk of dried paste, used for sealing letters, fastening documents together, and similar purposes, usually made of flour mixed with water, gum, and some non-poisonous coloring matter. Fancy transparent wafers are made of gelatin and isinglass in a variety of forms.

Perhaps the folds [of a letter] were lovingly connected by a wafer, pricked with a pin, and the direction written in a vile scrawl, and not a word spelt as it should be.
Colman, Jealous Wife, i.

(e) In artillery, a kind of primer. See primer[2].

Fortunately, the wafers by which the guns are discharged had been removed from the vents.
Preble, Hist. Flag, p. 471.

(f) In med., a thin circular sheet of dry paste used to facilitate the swallowing of powders. The sheet is moistened, and folded over the powder placed in its center. Sometimes wafers have the form of two watchglass-shaped disks of pasty material, which are made to adhere by moistening their edges, the powder being placed in the hollow between the two.—Medallion wafer, a wafer bearing some design on a ground of a different color.

wafer (wā'fėr), v. t. [< wafer, n.] 1. To attach by means of a wafer or wafers.

This little bill is to be wafered on the shop-door.
Dickens, Pickwick, l.

2. To seal or close by means of a wafer.

He . . . wafered his letter, and rushed with it to the neighboring post-office. Mrs. Gaskell, Sylvia's Lovers, xix.

wafer-ash (wā'fėr-ash), n. The hop-tree, Ptelea trifoliata: so called from its ash-like leaves and flat key-fruit suggesting a wafer. The bark of the root is considerably used as a tonic. See hop-tree.

The . . . great master . . . sent vessels called brigantines, for to cause the wafters of the sea to come into Rhodes for the keeping and fortifying of the towne, the which at the first sending came and presented their persons and ships. Hakluyt's Voyages, II. 75.

4. A sword having the flat part placed in the usual direction of the edge, blunted for exercises. Meyrick. (Halliwell.) wafture (wȧf′tu̇r), n. [< waft + -ure.] The act of wafting or waving; a beckoning or gesture.

But, with an angry wafture of your hand,
Gave sign for me to leave you.
Shak., J. C., ii. 1. 246.

Where least expected, the Platonic seed seems blown by the continual wafture of the winds of destiny.
Jour. Spec. Phil., XIX. 51.

wag[1] (wag), v.; pret. and pp. wagged, ppr. wagging. [< ME. waggen, < OSw. wagga, wag, fluctuate, rock (a cradle), Sw. vagga, rock (a cradle) (cf. Icel. vagga = OSw. wagga, Sw. vagga, a cradle, = Dan. vugge, a cradle, vugge, rock a cradle); a secondary form (parallel with AS. wagian, wag, > ME. wawen (see waw[2]) = OHG. wagōn, wecken, cause to move, = Goth. wagjan, gawagjan, make wag, stir, shake) of AS. wegan = OHG. wegan, move, = Goth. gawigan, shake up, cause to move: see weigh.] I. trans. 1. To cause to move up and down, backward and forward, or from side to side, alternately, as a small body jointed or attached to, or connected with, a larger one; cause to move one way or another, as on a pivot or joint, or on or from something by which the body moved is supported; cause to shake, oscillate, or vibrate slightly. From the quick, jerky, or abrupt motion indicated by the word, an idea of playful, sportive, mocking, scornful, or derisive motion is associated with it in certain phrases: as, to wag the head or the finger.

And thanne fondeth the Fende my fruit to destruye
With alle the wyles that he can, and waggeth the rote.
Piers Plowman (B), xvi. 41.

He found him selfe vnwist so ill bestad
That him he could not wag. Spenser, F. Q., V. i. 22.

And they that passed by reviled him, wagging their heads. Mat. xxvii. 39.

Let ditch-bred wealth henceforth forget to wag
Her base, though golden tail.
Quarles, Emblems, ii. 12.

Let me see the proudest
. . . but wag his finger at thee.
Shak., Hen. VIII., v. 3. 131.

He would plant himself straight before me, and stand wagging that bud of a tail. Dr. J. Brown, Rab, p. 12.

At length the busy time begins.
"Come, neighbours, we must wag."
Cowper, Yearly Distress.

wag[1] (wag), n. [< wag[1], v.] The act of wagging; a shake; an oscillation.

He . . . introduced himself with a wag of his tail, intimating a general willingness to be happy.
Dr. J. Brown, Spare Hours, 1st ser., p. 87.

wag[2] (wag), n. [Early mod. E. wagge; perhaps short for waghalter, formerly used humorously for 'a rogue' (cf. 'a mad wag' with 'a mad waghalter'), < wag[1], with ref. to moving the head playfully or derisively: see wag[1].] 1. One who is given to joking or jesting; a witty or humorous person; one full of sport and humor; a droll fellow. The word seems formerly to have been applied to a person who indulged in coarse, low, or broad humor, or buffoonery, as a practical joker.

Sir Fran. A prodigious civil gentleman, uncle; and yet as bold as Alexander upon occasion.
Unc. Rich. Upon a lady's occasion.
Sir Fran. Ha, ha, you are a wag, uncle.
Vanbrugh, Journey to London, iii. 1.

A wag is the last order even of pretenders to wit and good humour. He has generally his mind prepared to receive some occasion of merriment, but is of himself too empty to draw out any of his own set of thoughts; and therefore laughs at the next thing he meets, not because it is ridiculous, but because he is under a necessity of laughing. Steele, Tatler, No. 184.

2. A fellow: used with a shade of meaning sometimes slurring, sometimes affectionate, but without any attribution of humor or pleasantry. [Colloq. and archaic.]

But mildly and calmly shew how discredit reboundeth upon the authors, as dust flieth back into the wag's eyes that will needs be puffing it up.
G. Harvey, Four Letters, Pref.

And, with the Nymphs that haunt the silver streames, Learne to entice the affable young wagge.
Heywood, Fair Maid of the Exchange (Works, II. 66).

My master shall . . . make thee, instead of handling false dice, finger nothing but gold and silver, wag. . . . Wilt be secret?
Dekker and Webster, Northward Ho, iii. 2.

Let us see what the learned wag maintains
With such a prodigal waste of brains.
Longfellow, Golden Legend, vi.

★wage (wāj), n. [< ME. wage, < OF. wage, guage, gage = Pr. gatge, gatghe, gaji = Sp. gage = It. gaggio, a gage, pledge, guaranty: see gage[1], n.] 1†. A gage; a pledge; a stake.

But th' Elfin knight, which ought that warlike wage, Disdained to loose the meed he wonne in fray.
Spenser, F. Q., I. iv. 39.

2. That which is paid for a service rendered; what is paid for labor; hire: now usually in the plural. Sometimes the plural form is used as a singular. In common use the word wages is applied specifically to the payment made for manual labor or other labor of a menial or mechanical kind: distinguished (but somewhat vaguely) from salary (which see), and from fee, which denotes compensation paid to professional men, as lawyers and physicians.

I am worthy noon odyr wage,
But for to dwelle in eendeles woo.
Political Poems, etc. (ed. Furnivall), p. 174.

The wages of sin is death. Rom. vi. 23.

Since thou complainest of thy service and wages, be content to go back, and what our country will afford I do here promise to give thee. Bunyan, Pilgrim's Progress, i.

With a wage usually from twenty to twenty-five shillings a week. Nineteenth Century, XXII. 491.

One of the last matters transacted was the issue of the writs to the sheriffs and borough magistrates for the payment of the wages of the representatives in the house of commons. Stubbs, Const. Hist., § 447.

Real wages, in polit. econ., wages estimated not in money but in their purchasing power over commodities in general; the articles or services which the money wages will purchase. =Syn. 2. Pay, Hire, etc. See salary[1].

wage (wāj), v.; pret. and pp. waged, ppr. waging. [< ME. wagen, < OF. wager, waigier, guager, gager, gagier, F. gager = Pr. gatgar, gatjar, < ML. wadiare, pledge: see gage[1], v., and cf. wed[1].] I. trans. 1†. To pledge; bet; stake on a chance; lay; wager.

A certeine friende of yours . . . had waged with your honour a certeine wager.
Guevara, Letters (tr. by Hellowes, 1577), p. 136.

I dare wage
A thousand ducats, not a man in France
Outrides Roseilli. Ford, Love's Sacrifice, i. 2.

A new truth! Nay, an old newly come to light; for error cannot wage antiquity with truth.
Rev. T. Adams, Works, I. 472.

The tenant in the first place must produce his champion, who by throwing down his glove as a gage or pledge thus wages or stipulates battle with the champion of the demandant. Blackstone, Com., III. xxii.

2†. To venture on; hazard; attempt; encounter.

To wake and wage a danger profitless.
Shak., Othello, i. 3. 30.

3. To engage in, as in a contest; carry on, as a war; undertake.

The second battell was waged a little after Vespasian was chosen Emperour. Coryat, Crudities, I. 139.

What need I wage
Other contentious arguments, when I
By this alone can proue noe Dietie?
Times' Whistle (E. E. T. S.), p. 5.

I am not able to wage law with him.
B. Jonson, Staple of News, v. 1.

4†. To let out for pay.

Thou that doest live in later times must wage
Thy workes for wealth, and life for gold engage.
Spenser, F. Q., II. vii. 18.

5. To hire for pay; engage or employ for wages. [Obsolete or prov. Eng.]

And yf thei wage men to werre thei wryten hem in numbre;
Wol no treserour take hem wages, trauayle thei neuere so sore, Bote [unless] hij beon nempned in the numbre of hem that ben ywaged. Piers Plowman (C), xxiii. 259.

Alexander in the meane season, hauing sent Cleander to wage menne of warre out of Peloponese, . . . remoued his army to the Citie of Celenas.
J. Brende, tr. of Quintus Curtius, iii.

The cutler prefers to vegetate on his small earnings than to go as a waged labourer in a "house."
Nineteenth Century, XXIV. 516.

6†. To pay wages to.

I would have them well waged for their labour.
Latimer, 5th Sermon bef. Edw. VI., 1549.

At the last
I seem'd his follower, not partner, and He waged me with his countenance, as if I had been mercenary. Shak., Cor., v. 6. 40.

7. In ceram., to knead, work, or temper, as potters' clay.—To wage one's law, in old Eng. law, to come forward as a defendant, with others, on oath that he (the defendant) owes nothing to the plaintiff in manner as he has declared. See wager.

II. intrans. 1. To contend; battle. [Rare.]

I abjure all roofs, and choose
To wage against the enmity o' the air,
To be a comrade with the wolf and owl.
Shak., Lear, ii. 4. 212.

2. To serve as a pledge or stake for something else; be opposed as equal stakes in a wager; be equal in value: followed by with. [Rare.]

The commodity wages not with the danger.
Shak., Pericles, iv. 2. 34.

wagedom (wāj'dum), n. [< wage + -dom.] The method of paying wages for work done. [Rare.]

The employer of labour pockets the whole of the increment of value, leaving to the labourers only what they had to start with—viz., their own bodies, plus the cost of their maintenance during the process, and a small allowance for wear and tear. . . . Such is the modern system of wagedom. Westminster Rev., CXXVI. 136.

wage-earner (wāj'ėr″nėr), n. One who receives stated wages for labor.

Radical manufacturers and traders . . . have no more thought for the condition of the wage-earners who produce this profit than a Southern planter had for the religious welfare of his gang of slaves.
Nineteenth Century, XXVI. 738.

wage-fund, wages-fund (wāj'fund, wā'jez-fund), n. In polit. econ., that part of the total productive capital of a country or community which is employed in paying the wages of labor, as distinguished from the part invested in buildings, machinery, raw materials, etc. See the quotations. In modern economics wages are not regarded as paid out of capital, but as the specific product of current labor. Hence the term 'wages-fund' is of historical importance only.

Wages, then, depend mainly upon the demand and supply of labour, or, as it is often expressed, on the proportion between population and capital. By population is here meant the number only of the labouring class, or rather of those who work for hire; and by capital only circulating capital, and not even the whole of that, but the part which is expended in the direct purchase of labour. To this, however, must be added all funds which, without forming a part of capital, are paid in exchange for labour, such as the wages of soldiers, domestic servants, and all other unproductive labourers. There is unfortunately no mode of expressing by one familiar term the aggregate of what may be called the wages-fund of a country; and, as the wages of productive labour form nearly the whole of that fund, it is usual to overlook the smaller and less important part, and to say that wages depend on population and capital. J. S. Mill, Polit. Econ., II. xi. 1.

As I understand this passage [from Mill's "Pol. Econ."], it embraces the following statements: 1st, Wages-fund is a general term, used, in the absence of any other more familiar, to express the aggregate of all wages at any given time in possession of the laboring population; 2nd, on the proportion of this fund to the number of the laboring population depends at any given time the average rate of wages; 3rd, the amount of the fund is determined by the amount of the general wealth which is applied to the direct purchase of labor, whether with a view to productive or to unproductive employment. If the reader will carefully consider these several propositions, I think he will perceive that they do not contain matter which can be properly regarded as open to dispute. The first is little more than a definition. . . . The second merely amounts to saying that the quotient will be such as the dividend and divisor determine. The third equally contains an indisputable assertion; since, whatever be the remote causes on which the wages of hired labor depend, . . . the proximate act determining their aggregate amount must in all cases be a direct purchase of its services. In truth, the demand for labor, thus understood, as measured by the amount of wealth applied to the direct purchase of labor, might more correctly be said to be, than to determine, the Wages-fund. It is the Wages-fund in its inchoate stage, differing from it only as wealth just about to pass into the hands of laborers differs from the same wealth when it has got into their hands.
J. E. Cairns, Some Leading Principles of Political [Economy Newly Expounded, II. i. § 5.

wageling†, n. [< wage + -ling[1].] A hireling.

These are the very false prophets, the instruments of Satan, the deceivers, wolves, wagelings, Judases, dreamers, liars. Bp. Bale, Select Works, p. 439. (Davies.) wagen-boom, n. [D., < wagen, wagon, + boom, tree (= E. beam).] Same as wagon-tree.

wageour†, n. [< ME. wagen, wage: see wage.] A hired soldier. Barbour, Bruce, xi. 48. (Stratmann.) wageoure†, n. An obsolete form of wager.

wager (wā'jėr), n. [< ME. wageoure, wajour, < OF. wageure*, gageure, a wager, < wager, pledge, wager: see wage, v.] 1. A pledge; a gage; a guaranty.

A wajour he made, so hit wes ytold,
Ys heved of to smhyte, yef me him brohte in hold.
Execution of Sir Simon Fraser (Child's Ballads, VI. 279).

2. Something hazarded on an uncertain event; a stake. By statutes of England, Scotland, and most if not all of the United States, all contracts or agreements, whether by parole or in writing, involving wagers are null and void, and the wager or money due thereon cannot be recovered in any court of law. A wager is therefore merely a debt of honor, and if paid it is in the eye of the law the same thing as giving a gratuity, except perhaps as to the liability of a principal to reimburse his agent when the latter has paid it because in honor bound.

Ne waiour non with hym thou lay,
Ne at the dyces with hym to play.
Babees Book (E. E. T. S.), p. 306.

Hor. Content. What is the wager?
Luc. Twenty crowns.
Shak., T. of the S., v. 2. 69.

A wager is a promise to pay money, or transfer property, upon the determination or ascertainment of an uncertain event; the consideration for such a promise is either a present payment or transfer by the other party, or a promise to pay or transfer upon the event determining in a particular way. Anson, Contr., 166.

3. The act of betting; a bet.

We'll make a solemn wager on your cunnings.
Shak., Hamlet, iv. 7. 156.

4. That on which bets are laid; the subject of a bet. [Rare.]

The sea strave with the winds which should bee louder, and the shrouds of the ship, with a gastful nois to them that were in it, witnessed that their ruin was the wager of the other's contention. Sir P. Sidney, Arcadia, ii.

5. In old Eng. law, an offer to make oath of innocence or non-indebtedness; also, the act of making such oath, the oaths of eleven compurgators being conjoined as fortifying the defendant's oath.—Wager of battle or battel. See battle[1].—Wager of law, an old English mode of trial, whereby in an action of debt brought upon a simple contract between the parties, without any deed or record, the defendant might discharge himself by taking an oath that he did not owe the plaintiff anything. He was required, however, to bring with him eleven of his neighbors, called compurgators, who were to avow upon their oath that they believed in their consciences that he declared the truth.—Wager policy. WAGES, PRICES, AND TARIFFS IN THE UNITED STATES.

EXPLANATION OF THE FOLLOWING CHARTS.

THE graphic charts on the following pages show the course of prices of leading commodities and the course of wages paid in the principal industries in the United States during the period 1840–1908 as expressed in index numbers. There is also presented a chart showing the course of prices in England. In connection with these charts there is given a statement of the principal changes that have taken place in tariff legislation in the United States during the period 1890–1910.

Index numbers. In tracing the movement of the prices of a number of commodities taken collectively, or of the wages of employees, the method of index numbers is generally used. These index numbers, for commodities, are computed as follows: A certain number of commodities (for which the course of prices is to be ascertained) is chosen, and the aggregate price of specified quantities of these articles, at a certain fixed time, or the average of the aggregate prices for a fixed period, is taken as a base and is designated as 100. The aggregate prices of the same or similar commodities at other times are then calculated as percentages of the one aggregate which constitutes the base. This base varies in the different series of index numbers which have been presented by statisticians. In the United States Senate Finance Committee's report (see Chart I.) the prices and the wages for the year 1860 are each taken as the base, and the prices and wages in each of the other years are percentages of this, the aggregate prices and wages being higher or lower than in 1860 as the figures are above or below 100 respectively. In Sauerbeck's index numbers of prices in England (see Chart II.) the average of the aggregate prices for the eleven years 1867–1877 is taken as the base, i. e., 100. In the United States Bureau of Labor index numbers of prices and wages (see Charts III. and IV.) the average of the aggregates for the period 1890–1899 is taken as the base.

Weighted numbers. Frequently, in grouping the commodities, some articles which are ordinarily consumed in larger quantities are given more weight than others whose consumption is less. Thus if the ordinary consumption of a certain article is five times as great as that of a certain other, the price of the former would be multiplied by 5 before being added to the latter; and so, in computing the aggregate, the price of each article has a coefficient corresponding to the estimated quantity of its consumption. This method of computing index numbers is known as "weighting." (See below.)

Description of charts: Chart I. This chart shows the relative wholesale prices from 1840 to 1909, and the relative average wages, on a gold basis, in the United States from 1840 to 1907. The data used for the years 1840–1890 inclusive are those given in Tables 29 and 45, Part I., of Senate Report No. 1394, 52d Congress, 2d session. The index numbers are based upon the simple averages of the prices of food products, raw materials, and manufactured articles. While the quotations upon which they are based cover prices of over 400 articles, the prices of only 90 of these articles are used for the whole period of 51 years, and of 223 articles for the period from 1860 to 1890. The prices of the remaining articles could only be ascertained for shorter periods. Taken altogether, however, the compilation was the most exhaustive that had ever been made up to the latter year. The prices used in computing the index numbers are, as a rule, actual prices in January of each year, except for those articles for which the January prices are not the distinctive prices for the year, as for fresh vegetables, etc. In a few cases the average prices for the year were taken. The price and wage figures for the years 1862–1878 were converted to a gold basis before being reduced to index numbers. The price data for the years 1891–1909 inclusive used in this chart were obtained from Bulletin 87 of the United States Bureau of Labor, and are based upon the average yearly prices of 251 to 261 food and other commodities in common use. While the Bureau of Labor presents both simple and weighted averages, in this chart the simple averages were used in order to make them more nearly comparable with those for the preceding years. The data upon which the hourly wages for the period from 1891 to 1907 were based were obtained from Bulletin 77 of the United States Bureau of Labor. The index numbers are based upon the wages paid in the principal distinctively wage-working occupations in the leading manufacturing and mechanical industries in the United States. All the index numbers used in Chart I. were reduced to a common basis; that is, the prices and wages in the year 1860 were taken as the standard and are represented by 100. Since the figures for the period 1840–1890 were obtained from an entirely different source than those for the period 1891–1909, they are not strictly comparable with the latter. They are sufficiently so, however, to indicate the general trend of prices and wages, and are therefore presented as a single series in this chart. The figures shown under the caption "purchasing power" consist simply of the quotient obtained by dividing the index number of prices into that of wages for each year. While these figures do not strictly represent the purchasing power of the wages, since the prices used are wholesale prices, since they are not weighted according to consumption, and since they therefore do not accurately measure the living cost, they give a better idea of the relation between prices and wages than could be given in any other way. Thus when prices are high as compared with wages, the "purchasing power" is low and the line on the chart descends, and vice versa, in exact proportion to the difference between these two sets of index numbers.

Chart II. In order that the course of prices in England may be compared with that in the United States, this chart is presented, which shows the course of wholesale prices in England during the same period as that above, namely, 1840–1909. The price quotations upon which they are based were collected by Mr. Augustus Sauerbeck, of London, and published from time to time in the Journal of the Statistical Society of England. The quotations were collected from the most trustworthy trade journals and from reports of leading firms in England. The yearly prices are the averages of twelve monthly or fifty-two weekly quotations and embrace forty-five articles. In his index numbers the average for the period 1867–1877 is represented by 100.

Chart III. This chart shows the relative retail prices of food only, weighted according to family consumption, and the relative full-time weekly earnings of employees. The relative figures which show "purchasing power" therefore more nearly represent the actual relation between the earnings of the average workingman and the cost of the food which he consumes than does Chart I. The retail prices are those of 30 staple food commodities sold in 68 localities in the United States by 1,014 dealers. In 1901 an investigation was made by the United States Bureau of Labor of the cost of living of 2,567 families. The aggregate amount of consumption of each of the food items, as ascertained by this investigation, was computed, and this aggregate was multiplied by the relative price of the article in each case. The products were then reduced to index numbers and constitute the "weighted" figures used in this table. For the purpose of the present chart, the wages per hour were multiplied by the ascertained working hours per week, the product constituting the full-time weekly earnings. In these index numbers as well as in those used in Chart IV. the average for the period 1890–1899 is taken as the base or standard, i. e., 100.

Chart IV. This chart shows the trend of wholesale prices, during the period 1890–1909, of each of the six leading groups of commodities, as expressed in index numbers in Bulletin 87 of the United States Bureau of Labor.

Wagnerian (väg-nē'ri-an), a. [< Wagner (see def.) + -ian. The G. surname Wagner is from the noun wagner, a wagon-maker, cartwright, = E. wagoner.] Of or pertaining to any one named Wagner. Specifically—(a) Of or pertaining to Rudolph Wagner (1805–64), a German anatomist and physiologist. (b) Pertaining or relating to Richard Wagner (1813–83), a celebrated German musical composer, or to his music-dramas; characterized by the ideas or the style of Wagner. See Wagnerism.—Wagnerian corpuscles, the tactile corpuscles of Wagner. See corpuscle.—Wagnerian spot, the germinal spot. See nucleolus, 1.

Wagnerianism (väg-nē'ri-an-izm), n. [< Wagnerian + -ism.] Wagnerism. Contemporary Rev., LI. 448.

Wagnerism (väg'nėr-izm), n. [< Wagner + -ism.] 1. The art theory of Richard Wagner, especially as concerns the musical drama, including the general style of composition based on that theory. Among the many characteristics of the theory are these: the choice of a general subject in which the mythical and heroic elements are prominent; the amalgamation of poetry, music, action, and scenic effect into the most intimate union as equally important coöperating elements; the desertion of the conventionalities of the common Italian opera, especially of its sharply defined and contrasted movements and its tendency to the display of mere virtuosity; the abundant use of leading motives as a means to continuous and reiterated emotional effect; the immense elaboration of the orchestral parts, so that in them is furnished an unbroken presentation of or commentary on the entire plot; and the free use of new and remarkable means of effect, both scenic and instrumental. The Wagnerian ideal is often called (sometimes derisively) "the music of the future," from the title of one of Wagner's essays. While Wagnerism is best exemplified in the great dramas of Wagner himself, its qualities may be seen more or less in almost all the dramatic music of the last half of this century.

2. The study or imitation of the music of Richard Wagner.

Wagnerist (väg'nėr-ist), n. [< Wagner + -ist.] An adherent of Richard Wagner's musical methods; an admirer of his works. Also Wagnerite.

wagnerite[1] (wag'nėr-īt), n. [Named after F. M. von Wagner (1768–1851), head of the Bavarian mining department.] A transparent mineral having a vitreoresinous luster, wine-yellow or honey-yellow in color. It is a fluophosphate of magnesium.

Wagnerite[2] (väg'nėr-īt), n. [< Wagner + -ite[2].] Same as Wagnerist. The American, XVII. 110.

Wagner's corpuscles. See Wagnerian and corpuscle.

wagon, waggon (wag'on), n. [Early mod. E. also in pl. waganes; < D. wagen, a wagon or wain, = AS. wægn, E. wain: see wain[1]. Hence F. wagon, a railroad-car.] 1. A four-wheeled vehicle; a wain; specifically, a four-wheeled vehicle designed for the transport of heavy loads, or (of lighter build) for various purposes of business, as the delivery of goods purchased at a shop, or of express packages; loosely, such a vehicle, similar to the lighter business wagons, used for pleasure. The typical heavy wagon is a strong vehicle drawn by two or three horses yoked abreast, the fore wheels much smaller than the hind pair, and their axle swiveled to the body of the wagon to facilitate turning.

They trussed all their harnes in waganes.
Berners, tr. of Froissart's Chron., I. lxii.

Reeling with grapes, red waggons choke the way.
Byron, Beppo, st. 42.

Some of the inland traffic was still done by means of pack-horses. . . . But there were also waggons, which, by the divine permission, started for every town of note in England.
J. Ashton, Social Life in Reign of Queen Anne, II. 166.

2. An open four-wheeled vehicle for the conveyance of goods on railways. [Great Britain.]

—3†. A chariot.

Then to her yron wagon she betakes,
And with her beares the fowle welfavourd witch.
Spenser, F. Q., I. v. 28.

O Proserpina,
For the flowers now, that frighted thou let'st fall
From Dis's waggon! Shak., W. T., iv. 4. 118.

4. A tool for trimming the edges of gold-leaf to size for a book. It consists of a frame carrying four edges of cane for cutting the gold-leaf, which does not adhere to cane as it would to metal. E. H. Knight.

5. In mining, a car; a mine-car.—Conestoga wagon, a type of broad-wheeled wagon for the transportation of merchandise, made at Conestoga in Pennsylvania, originally for freighting goods over the deep soil of southern and western Pennsylvania: afterward it became the common vehicle of settlers going out on the prairies.

The road seemed actually lined with Conestoga wagons, each drawn by six stalwart horses and laden with farm produce. Josiah Quincy, Figures of the Past, p. 206.

Gipsy wagon. See Gipsy.—Skeleton wagon. See skeleton.

wagon (wag'on), v. t. [< wagon, n.] To transport, convey, or carry in a wagon: as, to wagon goods. [Colloq.]

Burnside having answered for the safety of the road, it had been determined to wagon a portion of the [bridge] equipages to Fredericksburg.
Comte de Paris, Civil War in America (trans.), II. 563.

wagonage, waggonage (wag'on-āj), n. [< wagon + -age.] 1. Money paid for carriage or conveyance by wagon.

Wagonage, indeed, seems to the commissariat an article not worth economizing.
Jefferson, To Patrick Henry (Correspondence, I. 158).

2. A collection of wagons.

wagon-bed (wag'on-bed), n. Same as wagon-box.

In the grassy piazza two men had a humble show of figs and cakes for sale in their wagon-beds.
Howells, The Century, XXX. 672.

wagon-boiler (wag'on-boi″lėr), n. A kind of steam-boiler having originally a semicylindrical top, the ends and sides vertical, and the bottom flat, thus having the shape of a wagon covered with an arched tilt. Improved forms have the sides and bottom slightly curved inward.

wagon-bow (wag'on-bō), n. A bent slat of wood used, generally in combination with others, to support the top or cover of a wagon.

wagon-box (wag'on-boks), n. The part of a wagon mounted upon the wheels and axles, and used to contain the freight or passengers. Also wagon-bed.

wagon-brake (wag'on-brāk), n. A brake used on a wagon.

wagon-breast (wag'on-brest), n. In coal-mining, a breast in which the wagons or mine-cars are taken up to the working-face. Penn. Surv. Glossary.

wagon-ceiling (wag'on-sē″ling), n. A semicircular or wagon-headed ceiling; a wagon-vault. See wagon-headed.

wagon-coupling (wag'on-kup″ling), n. A coupling for connecting the fore and hind axles of a wagon. In a carriage it is also called reach or perch. E. H. Knight.

wagon-drag (wag'on-drag), n. Same as drag, 1 (h).

wagoner[1], waggoner (wag'on-ėr), n. [= D. wagenaar, a wagoner, = OHG. waganari, a wagon-maker, MHG. wagener, G. wagner, wagon-maker, cartwright, driver; as wagon + -er[1].] 1. One who conducts or drives a wagon; a wagon-driver.

The waggoner . . . cracked his whip, re-awakened his music [bells], and went melodiously away.
Dickens, Bleak House, vi.

2†. One who drives a chariot; a charioteer.

Gallop apace, you fiery-footed steeds,
Towards Phœbus' lodging; such a waggoner
As Phaëthon would whip you to the west.
Shak., R. and J., iii. 2. 2.

3. [cap.] The constellation Auriga. See Auriga.

By this the Northerne wagoner had set
His sevenfold teme behind the stedfast starre
That was in Ocean waves yet never wet.
Spenser, F. Q., I. ii. 1.

wagoner[2]† (wag'on-ėr), n. An atlas of charts: a name formerly in use, derived from a work of this nature published at Leyden in 1584–5 by Wagenaar.

wagoner-book† (wag'on-ėr-bùk), n. Same as wagoner[2].

wagoness†, waggoness† (wag'on-es), n. [< wagon + -ess.] A female wagoner. [Rare.]

That she might serve for wagonesse, she pluck'd the waggoner backe,
And up into his seate she mounts. Chapman, Iliad, v. 888.

wagonette, waggonette (wag-o-net'), n. [Also wagonet; < F. wagonet; as wagon + -ette.] A pleasure-vehicle, either with or without a top, holding four or more persons. It has at the back two seats facing each other, running lengthwise, and one in front, running crosswise.

wagon-hammer (wag'on-ham″ėr), n. An upright bolt connecting the tongue and the doubletree of a vehicle. Upon it the doubletree swings. E. H. Knight.

wagon-headed (wag'on-hed″ed), a. Having a round-arched or semicylindrical top or head, like the cover or tilt of a wagon when stretched over the bows; round-arched: as, a wagon-headed roof or vault.—Wagon-headed ceiling, cylindrical or barrel vaulting, or a ceiling imitating the form of such vaulting.

wagon-hoist (wag'on-hoist), n. An elevator or lift used in livery-stables, carriage-factories, etc., to convey vehicles up or down.

wagon-jack (wag'on-jak), n. A lifting-jack for raising the wheels of a vehicle off the ground, so that they can be taken off for greasing, repairing, etc.

wagon-load (wag'on-lōd), n. The load carried by a wagon: as, a wagon-load of coal; hence, figuratively, a large amount: as, a very little text serves for a wagon-load of comment.

wagon-lock (wag'on-lok), n. In a vehicle, a device for retarding motion in going downhill. It operates as a brake by bringing a shoe to bear against the face of one rear wheel, or both. It differs essentially from a wagon-drag or wheel-drag used for the same purpose, the drag being a shoe placed under one of the wheels. A chain used to prevent a wheel from turning in descending a hill, by locking the wheel to the body of the wagon, is essentially a wagon-locking device, but the term in the United States always implies some form of friction handbrake. Wagon-locks are used on stages and other vehicles in mountainous districts, and are preferred to the wheel-drag, as being easily managed from the driver's seat, without stopping the vehicle. See drag, 1 (h).

wagon-master (wag′ǫn-mäs″tėr), n. A person who has charge of one or more wagons; especially, one in charge of wagons in a military train.

wagon-roof (wag′ǫn-rōf), n. A plain semicylindrical vault, or barrel-vault. E. A. Freeman, Venice, p. 93.

wagon-roofed (wag′ǫn-rōft), a. Having a semicylindrical or wagon-headed roof or vault. See wagon-headed.

wagonryt, waggonryt (wag′ǫn-ri), n. [< wagon + -ry: see -ery.] Conveyance by means of wagons; wagons collectively; wagonage. [Rare.]

He that sets to his hand though with a good intent to hinder the shogging of it, in this unlawfull waggonry wherein it rides, let him beware it be not fatall to him as it was to Uzza. Milton, Church-Government, i. 1.

wagon-top (wag′ǫn-top), n. A part of a locomotive-boiler, over the fire-box, which is larger in diameter than the rest of the shell. Designed to provide greater steam-room and disengagement area.

wagon-train (wag′ǫn-trān), n. A train, service, or collection of wagons, draft-animals, etc., organized for a special purpose; especially, the collection of wagons, etc., accompanying an army, to convey provisions, ammunition, the sick and wounded, etc.

wagon-tree (wag′ǫn-trē), n. [< wagon + tree; tr. D. wagen-boom.] A South African shrub, Leucadendron laurifolium (Protea laurifolia of Buck), growing 6 or 8 feet high. The trunk is as many inches thick. Its wood is of a reddish-brown color, beautifully marked with a cross or netted grain. Used at the Cape of Good Hope for the fellies of wheels, plows, etc.

wagon-vault (wag′ǫn-vâlt), n. A semicylindrical vault, or barrel-vault. See vault[1] and barrel-vault.

wagon-way (wag′ǫn-wā), n. In coal-mining, an underground horse-road. [North. Eng.]

wagonwright (wag′ǫn-rīt), n. [< wagon + wright. Cf. wainwright.] A mechanic who makes wagons.

wagpastiet, n. [Appar. lit. 'a pie-stealer,' < wag[1], v., + obj. pastie, pasty, pie.] A rogue.

A little wagpastie,
A deceiuer of folkes by subtill craft and guile.
Udall, Roister Doister, iii. 2.

wagshipt (wag′ship), n. [< wag[2] + -ship.] 1. Waggery; waggishness.

Let 's pierce the rundlets of our running heads, and give 'em a neat cup of wagship.
Middleton, Family of Love, ii. 3.

2. The state or dignity of being a wag. Marston, What you Will, iii. 3. [Humorous.]

wagsome (wag′sum), a. [< wag[2] + -some.] Waggish. [Rare.]

Still humoured he his wagsome turn.
W. S. Gilbert, Peter the Wag.

wagtail (wag′tāl), n. [< wag[1], v., + obj. tail[1].] 1. Any bird of the family Motacillidæ (which see): so called from the continual wagging motion of the tail. The species are very numerous, and chiefly confined to the Old World. Those of the subfamily Anthinæ are commonly called pipits or titlarks. (See cut under Anthus.) (a) The white, black, gray, and pied wagtails belong to the genus Motacilla, as M. alba and M. lugubris or Quaketail, or Pied Wagtail (Motacilla yarrelli).

yarrelli. (See Motacilla.) (b) The closely related genus Budytes comprises among others the common blue-headed yellow wagtail, B. flava, of very wide distribution in the Old World and found in Alaska.

2. Some similar bird. In the United States the name is frequently given to two birds of the genus Seiurus, the common water-thrush and the large-billed water-thrush, S. nævius and S. motacilla, members of the family Mniotiltidæ, or American warblers. See cut under Seiurus.

3†. A term of familiarity or contempt.

Wagtail, salute them all; they are friends.
Middleton, Michaelmas Term, iii. 1.

4. A pert person.

Osw. This ancient ruffian, sir, whose life
I have spared at suit of his gray beard —— Kent. . . . Spare my gray beard, you wagtail?
Shak., Lear, ii. 2. 73.

African wagtail, Motacilla capensis of South Africa.—Blue-headed yellow wagtail, the true Budytes flava.—Cape wagtail, the African wagtail.—Collared wagtail, a bird so named by Latham in 1783 from a bird described by Sonnini in 1766 from Luzon: not well identified, but supposed to be the wagtail distributed over most of Asia, with a host of synonyms, from which M. leucopsis is selected as the onym by late authority.—Common wagtail of England, the pied wagtail.—Field-wagtail, a yellow wagtail.—Garden-wagtail, the Indian wagtail.—Gray-headed yellow wagtail, Budytes viridis.—Gray wagtail, Motacilla melanope, or boarula, or sulphurea: more fully called gray water-wagtail (after Edwards, 1758), and also yellow water-wagtail by Albin (1738–40).—Green wagtail, a bird so described by Brown in 1775, and since commonly called Budytes viridis or B. cinereocapillus, ranging from Scandinavia to South Africa and the Malay countries.—Hudsonian wagtail (of Latham, 1801), the common titlark of North America, Anthus pennsylvanicus or ludovicianus, originally described and figured by Edwards in 1760 as the "lark from Pensilvania."—Indian wagtail, Nemoricola or Nemorivaga indica, now Limonidromus indicus, a true wagtail, but of a separate genus, wide-ranging in Asia and most of the islands zoölogically related to that continent.—Pied wagtail, Motacilla lugubris or yarrelli, the commonest wagtail of Great Britain.—Tschutschi wagtail†, the gray wagtail. Pennant, 1785.—Wagtail fantail, wagtail flycatcher, a true flycatcher of Australia, New Guinea, the Solomon Islands, etc., with fifteen different New Latin names, among which Rhipidura or Wagtail Flycatcher (Rhipidura tricolor).

Sauloprocta tricolor or motacilloides is most used. It is 7¾ inches long, and chiefly black and white in coloration, thus resembling one of the pied wagtails. Also called black fantail.—Water wagtail. See water-wagtail.—White wagtail, Motacilla alba, or another of this type.—Wood-wagtail, the common gray wagtail: sometimes mistaken for something else, and put in a genus Calobates, as C. sulphurea. Webster, 1890.—Yellow wagtail, Budytes rayi, or another of this type.

wagtail (wag′tāl), v. i. [< wagtail, n.] To flutter; move the wings and tail like a wagtail. [Rare.]

A payr of busie chattering Pies, . . .
From bush to bush wag-tayling here and there.
Sylvester, tr. of Du Bartas's Weeks, ii., The Trophies.

wagwant (wag′wônt), n. Same as wag-wanton.

wag-wanton (wag′wôn-tǫn), n. The quaking-grass, Briza media. [Prov. Eng.]

Wahabi, Wahabee (wä-hä′bē), n. [< Ar. Wahhabi, < Wahhab (see def.).] One of the followers of Abd-el-Wahhab (1691–1787), a Mohammedan reformer, who opposed all practices not sanctioned by the Koran. His successors formed a powerful dominion, whose chief seat was in Nejd in central Arabia. They were overthrown by Ibrahim Pasha in 1818, but afterward regained much of their former power in central Arabia. Also Wahabite.

A sect of Muhammadan puritans, known as Wahabis, who affect a strict and ascetic way of life, such as prevailed in the time of the Prophet, and denounce all commentaries on the Koran, and all such modern innovations as the worship of relics.
J. T. Wheeler, Short Hist. India, p. 668.

Wahabiism (wä-hä′bē-izm), n. [< Wahabi + -ism.] The doctrines, principles, or practices of the Wahabis. W. G. Palgrave.

Wahabite (wä-hä′bīt), n. [< Wahabi + -ite[2].] Same as Wahabi. Laboulaye.

wahahe (wä′hä-hā), n. [Maori.] A tree, Epicharis spectabile (Dysoxylum spectabile of Hooker), found in New Zealand. It has a height of 40 or 50 feet, and bears panicles of pale-colored flowers from 8 to 12 inches long, pendulous from the trunk and main branches. Its leaves are said to be used by the natives like hops, and an infusion of them as a stomachic.

Waha Lake trout. See trout[1].

wahoo (wä-hō′), n. [Amer. Ind.] 1. A North ★American shrub, the burning-bush, Euonymus atropurpureus, ornamental in autumn for its pendulous capsules, revealing in dehiscence the bright-scarlet arils of its seeds. Its bark is the officinal euonymus, credited with cholagogic and laxative properties.—2. The bearberry of the Pacific United States, Rhamnus Purshiana, the source of cascara sagrada, perhaps so called from its medicinal affinity to the former.—3. The winged elm, Ulmus alata, a small tree with corky winged branches, found southward in the United States. The wood is unwedgeable, and is largely used for hubs, blocks, etc. The name has also been applied to Tilia heterophylla (see Tilia) and to the Japanese quince (which see, under quince[1]).

Also written waahoo (this form being sometimes used distinctively in sense 1) and whahoo.

waidt, waidet. Obsolete spellings of the preterit and past participle of weigh[1].

waif (wāf), n. and a. [Formerly also waive (from the plural), also waift (see waive, n., waift); < ME. waif, weif, weife (pl. wayves, weyves), < OF. waif, wef, gueyf, gaif, fem. waive, gaive (pl. waives, gaives), a waif (choses gaives, things lost and not claimed), < Icel. veif, anything waving or flapping about, veifan, a moving about uncertainly, veifa, vibrate, waver: see waive.] I. n. 1. Anything blown by the wind or drifted in by the ocean; a thing tossed abroad and abandoned; a stray or odd piece or article.

Weifes, things forsaken, miscarried, or lost.
Cotgrave, 1611.

Rolling in his mind
Old waifs of rhyme. Tennyson, The Brook.

2. In law: (a) Goods found of which the owner is not known.

Of wardes and of wardemotes, wayues and strayues.
Piers Plowman (C), i. 92.

(b) Such goods as a thief, when pursued, throws away to prevent being apprehended.

Waifs . . . are goods stolen, and waved or thrown away by the thief in his flight, for fear of being apprehended.
Blackstone, Com., I. viii.

3. A wanderer; one who is lost; a neglected, homeless wretch: applied also to beasts.

Virtue and vice had bound'ries in old time; . . .
'Twas hard perhaps on here and there a waif,
Desirous to return, and not receiv'd.
Cowper, Task, iii. 80.

Oh a' ye pious, godly flocks, . . .
Wha now will keep ye frae the fox, . . .
Or wha will tent the waifs and crocks
About the dykes! Burns, The Twa Herds.

4. Same as weft or waft.

The officer who first discovers it [a whale] sets a waif (a small flag) in his boat, and gives chase.

Shak., 1 Hen. IV., iii. 1. 219.

I have my desire, sir, to behold
That youth and shape which in my dreams and wakes
I have so oft contemplated.
B. Jonson, Staple of News, ii. 1.

2. The act of watching or keeping vigil, especially for a solemn or festive purpose; a vigil; specifically, an annual festival kept in commemoration of the completion and dedication of a parish church; hence, a merrymaking; a festive gathering. The wake was kept by an all-night watch in the church. Tents were erected in the churchyard to supply refreshments to the crowd on the following day, which was kept as a holiday. Through the large attendance from neighboring parishes at wakes, devotion and reverence gradually diminished, until they ultimately became mere fairs or markets, characterized by merrymaking and often disgraced by indulgence and riot. In popular usage this word has the same meaning as vigil. The wake or revel of country parishes was, originally, the day of the week on which the church had been dedicated; afterward, the day of the year. In 1536 an act of convocation appointed that the wake should be held in every parish on the same day, namely, the first Sunday in October; but it was disregarded. Wakes are expressly mentioned in the "Book of Sports" of Charles I. among the feasts which should be observed. The wake appears to have been also held on the Sunday after the day of dedication; or, more usually, on the day of the saint to whom the church was dedicated. In Ireland it is called the patron day. Brand, Popular Antiquities.

He is wit's pedler, and retails his wares
At wakes and wassails, meetings, markets, fairs.

Didsbury Wakes will be celebrated on the 8th, 9th, and 10th of August [1825]. . . . The enjoyments consist chiefly of ass-races, for purses of gold; prison-bar playing, and grinning through collars, for ale; . . . and balls each evening. Quoted in Hone's Year Book, col. 958.

3. An all-night watch by the body of the dead, before burial. This custom seems to be of Celtic origin, and is now characteristic of Ireland, or of the Irish in other countries; but it was formerly observed in Scotland and Wales. It probably originated from a superstition that the body might be carried off by invisible spirits, or from a more rational fear of injury to it from wild beasts. In early literature it has the name of likewake, lichwake. The wake was originally a combination of mourning for the dead and rejoicing in his memory and for his deliverance, but in later times has often degenerated into a scene of wild grief and gross orgies. See likewake.

How that the liche-wake was y-holde
Al thilke night. Chaucer, Knight's Tale, l. 2100.

The late-wake is a ceremony used at funerals. The evening after the death of any person, the relations and friends of the deceased meet at the house, attended by a bagpipe or fiddle; the nearest of kin, be it wife, son, or daughter, opens a melancholy ball, dancing and greeting, i. e. crying violently, at the same time; and this continues till daylight, but with such gambols and frolics among the younger part of the company that the loss which occasioned them is often more than supplied by the consequences of that night. If the corpse remain unburied for two nights, the same rites are renewed.
Pennant, Tour in Scotland, p. 112.

2. To proceed or move through, over, or upon by walking, or as if by walking; traverse at a walk.

If that same demon that hath gull'd thee thus Should with his lion gait walk the whole world.
Shak., Hen. V., ii. 2. 122.

Yes — she is ours — a home-returning bark; . . .
She walks the waters like a thing of life.
Byron, Corsair, i. 3.

3. To cause to walk; lead, drive, or ride at a walk.

I will rather trust . . . a thief to walk my ambling gelding. Shak., M. W. of W., ii. 2. 319.

I am much indebted to you
For dancing me off my legs, and then for walking me.
Fletcher, Wildgoose Chase, iii. 1.

4. To escort in a walk; take to walk.

I feel the dew in my great toe; but I would put on a cut shoe, that I might be able to walk you about; I may be laid up to-morrow.
Colman and Garrick, Clandestine Marriage, ii.

Old Pendennis . . . walked the new arrivals about the park and gardens, and showed them the carte du pays.
Thackeray, Pendennis, lvi.

5. To move, as a box or trunk, in a manner having some analogy to walking, partly by a rocking motion, and partly by turning the object on its resting-point in such manner that at each rocking movement an alternate point of support is employed, the last one used being always in advance of the previous one in the direction toward which the object is to be moved. — 6. To send to or keep in a walk. See walk, n., 8 (b).

It is customary to send puppies out at three or four months of age to be kept by cottagers, butchers, small farmers, etc., at a weekly sum for each, which is called walking them. Dogs of Great Brit. and America, p. 197.

To walk one's chalks. See chalk. — To walk the chalk, to walk the chalk-mark, to keep straight in morals or manners: a figurative phrase, from the difficulty a drunken man has in walking upon a straight line chalked upon the floor by his comrades to test his degree of sobriety. Compare I., 5. — To walk the hospitals, to attend the medical and surgical practice of a general hospital, as a student, under one or more of the regular staff of physicians or surgeons attached to such a hospital. ★— Walking the plank. See plank.

walk (wâk), n. [< ME. walc, walk, < AS. gewealc, a rolling, moving, = MHG. walc = Icel. vālk, a tossing; from the verb.] 1. Manner of action; course, as of life; way of living: as, a person's walk and conversation.

This is the melancholy walk he lives in,
And chooses ever to increase his sadness.
Fletcher, Double Marriage, iv. 3.

Oh for a closer walk with God!
Cowper, Olney Hymns, i.

2. Range or sphere of action; a department, as of art, science, or literature.

There are strong minds in every walk of life, that will rise superior to the disadvantages of situation.
A. Hamilton, The Federalist, XXXVI.

the trot, and varying much in this respect with the different degrees of speed and with the individual habits of the animal. Compare cut under run.

Why dost thou not go to church in a galliard and come home in a coranto? My very walk should be a jig.
Shak., T. N., i. 3. 138.

He stands erect; his slouch becomes a walk;
He steps right onward, martial in his air.
Cowper, Task, iv. 639.

6. A piece of ground fit to walk in; a place in which one is accustomed to walk; a haunt.

His walk
The fiery serpent fled and noxious worm.
Milton, P. R., i. 311.

We intend to lay ambushment in the Indian's walks, to cut off their men.
N. Thomas (Appendix to New England's Memorial, p. 430).

7. A place laid out or set apart for walking; an avenue; a promenade.

I saw a very goodly walke in Mantua roofed over and supported with thirty nine faire pillars.
Coryat, Crudities, I. 148.

Specifically — (a) An avenue set with trees or laid out in a grove or wood.

Get ye all three into the box-tree: Malvolio's coming down this walk. Shak., T. N., ii. 5. 19.

Up that long walk of limes I past.

See Gressoria.—9†. That with which one walks; a foot; a leg.

And with them halted down (Proud of his strength) lame Mulciber, his walkers quite misgrown,
But made him tread exceeding sure.
Chapman, Iliad, xx. 36.

Double walker, a fanciful name for an amphisbænian.—Walker! or Hookey Walker! a slang ejaculation of incredulity uttered when a person tells a story which one believes to be false or "gammon." Various problematical explanations have been offered. [Slang, Eng.]

"Go and buy it [a prize turkey]." "Walk-er!" exclaimed the boy. "No, no," said Scrooge; "I am in earnest."
Dickens, Christmas Carol, v.

Walkers' clay, fullers' earth.—Walkers' earth, fullers' earth. The use of the word walker for fuller has now become obsolete in England, but a certain unctuous variety of fullers' earth found in the Lower Ludlow beds, in Wales, appears to be sometimes provincially designated both as walkers' earth and as dye-earth.

Walker cell. See cell, 8.

Walker tariff. See tariff.

walking (wâ'king), n. [< ME. walkynge; verbal n. of walk, v.] 1†. The act or process of fulling cloth.—2†. A mode or manner of behaving or living.

walking-leaf (wâ'king-lēf), n. 1. Same as walking-fern.—2. An orthopterous insect of the family Phasmidæ, belonging to Phyllium or some closely allied genus. The body is flat, the antennæ are short, the legs have broad leaf-like expansions; the female wing-covers are large, and veined like leaves, which they closely resemble. The females are usually wingless, while the males generally possess large wings, but lack wing-covers or tegmina. Also called leaf-insect. See cut under Phyllium, and compare walking-stick, 2.

walking-staff (wâ'king-stȧf), n. A staff used for assistance in walking, especially such a staff longer than the ordinary walking-stick or -cane.

walking-stick (wâ'king-stik), n. 1. A stick prepared for use as an assistance in walking, differing from the staff (compare pilgrim's staff, under pilgrim, and bourdon[1]) in being generally shorter and lighter. Walking-sticks were especially in fashion as part of the costume of a man of elegance toward the close of the seventeenth and in the eighteenth century. The length of 3 feet or somewhat less has generally been maintained, but temporary fashion has favored much longer ones, and at times has required them to be carried by women. They are sometimes carried so light and limber as to be rather for amusement and occupation of the hands than for support. Compare cane[1], 4.

Walking-stick (Diapheromera femorata).

2. Any one of the slender-bodied species of the gressorial orthopterous family Phasmidæ; a stick-bug; a specter. The common walking-stick of the eastern United States is Diapheromera femorata. See also cut under Phasma, and compare walking-leaf, 2.—Walking-stick palm. See palm[2].

walking-straw (wâ'king-strâ), n. A kind of walking-stick, the large Diura or Cyphocrana titan, 6 or 8 inches long, a native of New South Wales.

tion of the family. It is of a brownish-olive color, beneath bright-yellow, the wings and tail brown, the latter with yellowish tip, and a crown with a median scarlet crest. It is 7¼ inches long, and inhabits the plains of Brazil, Bolivia, Paraguay, Uruguay, the Argentine Republic, and Venezuela.

walking-wheel (wâ'king-hwēl), n. 1. A cylinder which is made to revolve about an axle by the weight of men or animals climbing by steps either its external or its internal periphery, being employed for the purpose of raising water, grinding corn, and various other operations for which a moving power is required. See treadwheel.—2. A pedometer. E. H. Knight.

walk-mill† (wâk'mil), n. [< ME. walk-mylne; < walk + mill[1].] A fulling-mill.

Hys luddokkys [loins] thay lowke like walk-mylne clogges.
Towneley Mysteries, p. 313.

The Clothiers in Flanders, by the flatnesse of their riuers, cannot make Walkmilles for their clothes [cloths].
Hakluyt's Voyages, II. 163.

walk-out (wâk'out), n. A laborer's strike. [Colloq., U. S.]

walk-over (wâk'ō″vėr), n. In sporting, a race in which but one contestant appears, who, being obliged to go over the course, may walk instead of running; also, the winning of such a race; hence, figuratively, an easy victory; success gained without serious opposition. [Colloq.]

"That's the bay stallion there," said one man to me, as he pointed to a racer, "and he's never been beaten. It's his walk-over." The Century, XXXVIII. 403.

walkyr (wol'kir), n. Same as valkyr.

walkyrian (wol-kir'i-an), a. [< walkyrie + -an.] Same as valkyrian.

walkyrie (wol-kir'i), n. [ME., < AS. wælcyrie = Icel. valkyrja: see valkyr.] 1. Same as valkyr.—2†. A wise woman; a fate-reader.

Wychez & walkyries wonnen to that sale [hall].
Alliterative Poems (ed. Morris), ii. 1577.

And the Helynge of here Houses, and the Wowes and the Dores ben alle of Wode. Mandeville, Travels, p. 247.

If the walls of their [Assyrian palaces'] apartments had not been wainscoted with alabaster slabs, we should never have been able to trace their form with anything like certainty. J. Fergusson, Hist. Arch., I. 161.

(b) A solid and permanent inclosing fence of masonry, as around a field, a garden, a park, or a town.

2. A rampart; a fortified enceinte or barrier: often in the plural. See cuts under chemin-de-ronde, fortification, and retaining wall.

Once more unto the breach, dear friends, once more;
Or close the wall up with our English dead.
Shak., Hen. V., iii. 1. 2.

3. Something which resembles or suggests a wall: as, a wall of armed men; a wall of fire.

Within this wall of flesh
There is a soul counts thee her creditor.
Shak., K. John, iii. 3. 20.

Compass'd round by the blind wall of night.
Tennyson, Enoch Arden.

4. A defense; means of security or protection.

They were a wall unto us both by night and day, all the while we were with them keeping the sheep.
1 Sam. xxv. 16.

5. In mining, one of the surfaces of rock between which the vein or lode is inclosed; the country, or country rock, adjacent to the vein. See vein. If the vein is, as is usually the case, inclined at an angle, the wall which is over the miner's head, or overhangs him, is called the hanging wall; that which is under him, the foot-wall. In coal-mining the rock adjacent to the bed of coal which is being worked is called the roof or the floor, according as it is above or beneath, and this is the case whether the strata be horizontal or inclined at an angle. The walls of a vein are called in some parts of England the cheeks.

6. In her., a bearing having some resemblance to a wall, usually embattled. It generally covers a large part of the escutcheon, and the line of division between it and the field may be bendwise, or bendwise sinister. It is, therefore, a division of the field by an embattled or crenelle line, the lower part being masoned, and having usually an arched doorway represented in it.

7. In anat. and zoöl., a paries; an extended investing or containing structure or part of the body: as, a cell-wall; the walls of the chest or abdomen: generally in the plural.—8. In corals, the proper outer investment of the visceral chamber, whether of a single corallum or of a single corallite of a compound corallum. Hard structures upon the inside of the wall are the endotheca; upon the outside, the exotheca. The condition of the wall varies greatly: it is pervious, as in the Perforata, or impervious, as in the Aporosa; smooth, or variously costate, striate, etc.; and it may be indistinguishably united with the cœnenchyme, or replaced more or less completely by the epitheca.

9. Same as wall-knot.—Bridge wall. Same as bridge[1], n., 4.—Counterscarp, dwarf, grout wall. See the qualifying words.—Hanging wall, in mining, that wall of the vein or lode which is over the miner's head while he is working, the vein being supposed to have a decided underlay. The opposite wall is the foot-wall. If the vein is perfectly vertical, there is neither hanging wall nor foot-wall, and the two walls are then distinguished by reference to the points of the compass. Also called hanging side.—Head wall. See head.—Hollow wall, a double wall with a vacant space between the two faces.—Mask-wall. See mask[3].—Median, partition, perpend wall. See the qualifying words.—Plinth of a wall. See plinth.—Retaining wall. See retaining.—Straight ends and walls. See straight[1].—The wall, the right or privilege of passing next the wall when encountering another person or persons in the street: a right valued in old-fashioned streets with narrow sidewalks or no footpath, as giving a safer or more cleanly passage: used also in the phrase to give or take the wall.

Spa. Signor Cavalero Danglatero, I must haue the wall.
Eng. I doe protest, hadst thou not enforst it, I had not regarded it; but since you will needs haue the wall, Ile take the pains to thrust you into the kennel.
Heywood, If you Know not me, i.

To drive to the wall. See drive.—To go to the wall, to be pushed to one side; succumb to rivals or to the pressure of circumstances.—To hang by the wall, to hang up neglected; hence, to remain unused.

All the enrolled penalties
Which have, like unscour'd armour, hung by the wall.
Shak., M. for M., i. 2. 171.

To push or thrust to the wall, to force to give place; crush by superior power.

Women, being the weaker vessels, are ever thrust to the wall.
Shak., R. and J., i. 1. 20.

To take the wall of. See the wall (above) and take.—Trapezoidal wall, a retaining wall, upright where it comes against the bank, but with a sloping face.—Vitrified wall. See vitrified.—Wall-barley. Same as squirreltail.—Wall-teeth. Same as molar teeth (which see, under tooth). (See also party-wall, training-wall.) wall[1] (wâl), v. t. [< ME. walle, wallen, wall, surround with walls.] 1. To inclose with a wall or as with a wall; furnish with walls: as, to wall a city.

Certes the Kyng of Thebes, Amphioun,
That with his syngyng walled that citee.
Chaucer, Manciple's Tale, l. 13.

This flesh which walls about our life.
Shak., Rich. II., iii. 2. 167.

2. To defend by walls; fortify.

The terror of his name that walls us in From danger. Denham.

3. To obstruct or hinder as by a wall.

On either hand thee there are squadrons pitch'd,
To wall thee from the liberty of flight.
Shak., 1 Hen. VI., iv. 2. 24.

4. To fill up with a wall.

The ascent [to the mosque of Sultan Hassan] was by several steps, which are broken down, and the door wall'd up.
Pococke, Description of the East, I. 31.

5. In Eng. university slang, same as gate.

To gate or wall a refractory student.
Macmillan's Mag., II. 222.

To wall a rope, to make a wall-knot on the end of a rope.

wall[2] (wâl), v. i. [< ME. wallen, < AS. weallan (pret. weól, pp. weallen), boil, well, = OS. wallan = OFries. walla = D. wallen = OHG. wallan = MHG. G. wallen = Icel. vella (pret. val) = Goth. wallan* (not recorded), boil, well. Hence ult. well[1] (a secondary form of wall[2]), wall[1], n., well[1], n., wallop[1], etc.] 1. To boil. Ray.—2. To well, as water; spring. Alliterative Poems (E. E. T. S.), i. 365.

wall[2] (wâl), n. [< ME. walle, < AS. weall* (= OFries. walla), a well, < weallan, boil, well: see wall[2], v., and cf. well[1], n.] A spring of water. [Prov. Eng.]

His sword-knot this, his cravat that designed.
Dryden, Epil. to Etherege's Man of Mode.

3. A place to which an animal, as a buffalo, resorts to wallow; also, the traces of its wallowing left in the mire. Some localities called by this name (notably the "hog-wallows" of the San Joaquin Valley, in California) are on too large a scale to have been formed in this way. Their origin has not been satisfactorily explained.

They had come to an alkali mud-hole, an old buffalo-wallow, which had filled up and was covered with a sun-baked crust, that let them through as if they had stepped on a trap-door. T. Roosevelt, The Century, XXXV. 658.

4. The alder-tree. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

Sir T. Overbury, Characters, A Dunce.

wall-painting (wâl'pān″ting), n. 1. The painting of the surface of a wall, or of kindred surfaces, with ornamental designs or figure-subjects, as a decoration. Such painting is usually classified as encaustic or as fresco or tempera painting.—2. An example or work of painting of this kind.

wall-paper (wâl'pā″pėr), n. Paper, usually decorated in color, used for pasting on walls or ceilings of rooms; paper-hangings. Modern wall-papers are printed from blocks by hand or in color-printing machines. A great variety of styles are now used, including plain papers in single colors, striped patterns, geometrical patterns, and arabesque, flower, pictorial and conventional, and even comic designs. Large pictorial papers, with life-sized figures, were popular fifty years ago, and are still made in limited quantities. The styles also include a variety of surface-effects, as satin-finish, flock-papers, and watered, embossed, and stamped patterns. Gilding and bronzing are also largely used. Cartridge-papers are thick, heavy papers in single colors. Japanese papers include imitations of crape and leather, either plain, gilded, or in patterns. Veneers of wood pasted on paper also are used.

wall-pennywort (wâl'pen″i-wėrt), n. See pennywort (a).

wall-pepper (wâl'pep″ėr), n. The stonecrop, Sedum acre, an intensely acrid plant formerly used as a remedy in scorbutic diseases. See stonecrop.

wall-pie (wâl'pī), n. Same as wall-rue.

wall-piece (wâl'pēs), n. A piece of artillery prepared for mounting on the wall of a fortress, as distinguished from one intended for transportation from place to place; especially, of ancient firearms, a light gun, a long musket, or the like, mounted on a swivel.

As muzzle-loaders, wall-pieces, on account of the length of their barrels, were most difficult to load, so that we find more breech-loading wall-pieces than early breech-loading small-arms. W. W. Greener, The Gun, p. 91.

wall-plat (wâl'plat), n. 1. Same as wall-bird. —2. Same as wall-plate, 1. Halliwell.

wall-plate (wâl'plāt), n. 1. In building, a timber placed horizontally in or on a wall, under the ends of girders, joists, and other timbers. Its function is to insure even distribution of pressures, and to bind the wall together. The wall-plate of a roof of circular or elliptical plan is called a curb-plate. See cuts under plate, 7, and roof.

2. In mining, one of the two long pieces of timber which with two short ones (end pieces) make up a set in the timbering of a shaft. The sets are usually from 5 to 6 feet apart, and are themselves supported by the studdles in the corners of the shaft.

3. In mach., a vertical plate at the back of a plumber-block bracket, for attaching it to a wall or post. E. H. Knight.—4. A plaque, like that of a sconce; especially, a mirror from the face of which projects the bracket or arm supporting a candle.

wall-pocket (wâl'pok″et), n. A flat pouch or receptacle for newspapers or other articles, designed to be hung upon the wall of a room.

wall-rib (wâl'rib), n. In medieval vaulting, a common English name for the longitudinal rib at one end of a vaulting-compartment; an arc formeret. In the fully developed style there is no wall at the ends of the compartments, but a window filling the whole space; one of the other names is therefore to be preferred to that of wall-rib.

wall-rock (wâl'rok), n. In mining, the rock forming the walls of a vein; the country-rock.

wall-rocket (wâl'rok″et), n. See rocket[2].

wall-rue (wâl'rö), n. A small delicate fern, Asplenium Ruta-muraria, growing on walls and cliffs. Also called rue-fern, wall-pie, tentwort, and wall-rue spleenwort.

wall-saltpeter (wâl'sâlt-pē″tėr), n. Nitrocalcite.

wall-scraper (wâl'skrā″pėr), n. A chisel-edged tool for scraping down walls preparatory to papering.

Wallsend (wâlz'end), n. A variety of English coal extensively used in London: so called because originally dug at Wallsend on the Tyne, close to the spot where the Roman Wall ended.

It is of very superior quality for household use, and is mined in the district extending from the Tyne to the Wear, and from the Wear to Castle Eden, and in another area about Bishop Auckland. The most important coal in the Newcastle district is the "High main" or "Wallsend" Seam. It is the highest workable coal, and varies from 5 to 6 feet in thickness.
Hull, Coal-Fields of Gt. Brit., 4th ed., p. 274.

wall-sided (wâl'sī″ded), a. Having sides nearly perpendicular, as a ship: opposed to tumble-home.

wall-space (wâl'spās), n. In arch., an expanse of wall unbroken by architectural features or ornaments; especially, such an expanse considered as a feature of design, or as a field for decoration in painting, or of any other nature.

wall-spleenwort (wâl'splēn″wėrt), n. Same as wall-rue.

wall-spring (wâl'spring), n. A spring of water issuing from stratified rocks.

wall-tent (wâl'tent), n. See tent[1].

wall-tooth (wâl'töth), n. A large double tooth. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

wall-tower (wâl'tou″ėr), n. A tower built in connection with or forming an essential part of a wall; especially one of the series of towers which strengthened the mural fortifications of former times, from remote antiquity until the advance of artillery compelled the modification of military engineering. See also cut under castle.

Wall-tower, 13th century.—Fortifications of Carcassonne, France. (From Viollet-le-Duc's "Dict. de l'Architecture.") wall-tree (wâl'trē), n. In hort., a fruit-tree trained upon a wall for the better exposure of the fruit to the sun, for utilizing the radiation of the heat of the wall, and for protection from high winds.

wall-vase (wâl'vās), n. In Oriental decorative art, a small vase, having one side flat, and with a hole near the top by which it can be hung upon the wall. In some cases the form is that of half an ordinary vase having a surface of revolution; but sometimes the form is specially fitted to its purpose, irregular, or even fantastic, and may be suggested by a draped figure.

wall-washer (wâl'wosh″ėr), n. A plate on the end of a tie-rod or tension-rod, and in contact with the face of the wall strengthened or supported by the rod. These washers are named from their shape: as, bonnet-washer, S-washer, star-washer. E. H. Knight.

wall-wasp (wâl'wosp), n. A wasp that makes its nest in walls; specifically, Odynerus muraria.

wall-wight†, a. Same as wale-wight.

Turn four-and-twenty wall-wight men,
Like storks, in feathers gray.
The Earl of Mar's Daughter (Child's Ballads, I. 176).

wallwort (wâl'wėrt), n. [< ME. walworte, walwurt, wallwort, < AS. wealwyrt, < weall, wall, + wyrt, wort.] The dwarf elder, or danewort, Sambucus Ebulus; sometimes, also, the wall-pellitory, Parietaria officinalis; the stonecrop, Sedum acre; and the navelwort, Umbilicus Umbilicus.

wally[1] (wol'i), v. t. [Origin obscure.] To cocker; indulge. [Prov. Eng.]

wally[2] (wol'i), interj. Same as waly[2]. [Provincial.]—Wally fa' you! ill luck befall you!

Wally fa' you, Willie,
That ye could nae prove a man.
Eppie Morrie (Child's Ballads, VI. 262).

wallydraigle, wallydraggle (wol'i-drā-gl, -drag-l), n. The youngest of a family; a bird in the nest; hence, any feeble, ill-grown creature. Ramsay. [Scotch.]

walm†, n. [ME. walm, < AS. wealm, wælm* (= OHG. walm), lit. a boiling up, < weallan, boil, gush forth, as water: see wall[2], well[1].] A bubble in boiling.

Wyth vij. walmes that are so felle,
Hote spryngyng out of helle.
MS. Cantab. Ff. ii. 38, f. 137. (Halliwell.) walm†, v. i. [< ME. walmen, welmen, boil; < walm, n.] To rise; boil up; bubble.

The wikkid werchinge that walmed in her daies,
And 3it woll here-after but wisdome it lette.
Richard the Redeless, iii. 114.

walnote†, n. A Middle English form of walnut.

walnut (wâl'nut), n. [Formerly also wallnut, ★wallnutte; < ME. walnot, walnote, < AS. wealhhnutu, walhhnutu* (= MD. walnote, D. walnoot = G. walnuss = Icel. valhnot = Sw. valnöt = Dan. valnöd), lit. 'foreign nut' (so called with ref. to Italy and France, whence the nut was first brought to the Germans and English), < wealh, foreign (see Welsh), + hnutu, nut. Cf.

welshnut.] 1. The fruit of the nut-bearing tree Juglans regia; also, the tree itself, or its wood. The walnut-tree is native from the Caucasus and Armenia to the mountains of northern India, and is extensively cultivated, and in some places naturalized, in temperate Europe. It grows from 40 to 60 or even 100 feet high, with a massive trunk and broad spreading top, and bears pinnate leaves with few smooth leaflets. It produces the well-known sweet-seeded nuts of this name, in America distinguished as English walnuts. These are surrounded with a thin, brittle, and easily separated husk. The shell is thin in different degrees, or in the wild state thicker. The kernel yields some 50 per cent. of oil, which is largely expressed in France and other parts of Europe, as also in Asia. That of the first pressing is used for food, like olive-oil, though ranked less highly; that of the second pressing, called fire-drawn, the cake having been submitted to boiling water, is more siccative even than linseed-oil, and hence is by some artists the most highly esteemed of all oils; it is a good lamp-oil, and is available for making soft-soap, etc. The whole fruit when quite young makes a good pickle. The shell of a large variety, called double walnut, is used in France for making purses, cases for jewelry, etc. The leaves and the hull of the fruit are used in Europe for various medicinal purposes. Walnut-wood is light, tough, and handsome, plain or with a bur; before the introduction of mahogany it was the leading cabinet-wood of Europe, and is still preferred to all other wood for gunstocks.

Walnut-tree (Juglans regia).

> Piers Plowman (B), xi. 251.
>
> I observed . . . many goodly rowes of wall nutte trees.
> Coryat, Crudities, I. 25.

2. In the United States, frequently, same as black walnut and rock-walnut (the fruit, the tree, or its wood). See below.—3. In parts of New York, New England, and some other localities, same as hickory-nut or hickory. This is sometimes distinguished as shagbark or shellbark walnut.—Ash-leafed walnut. Same as Caucasian walnut.—Belgaum walnut. Same as Indian walnut.—Black walnut, a North American tree, Juglans nigra, or its timber. The tree ranges, in rich bottom-lands and on hillsides, through a large part of the eastern half of the United States, but is becoming scarce. It grows from 90 to 140 feet high, with a trunk from 6 to 9 feet in diameter. The wood is heavy, hard, and strong, easily worked, and susceptible of a beautiful polish; it is purplish-brown when first cut, but becomes darker with age. It is more generally used for cabinet-making, inside finish, and gunstocks than any other North American tree. (Sargent.) The nuts are edible, but not very choice; the shell is hard, the husk thick and difficult to remove. The tree grows rapidly, and is more or less planted on the prairies.

> They have a sort of walnut they call black walnuts, which are as big again as any I ever saw in England, but are very rank and oily, having a thick, hard, foul shell, and come not clear of the husk as the walnut in France doth; but the inside of the nut, and leaves, and growing of the tree declare it to be of the walnut kind.
> Beverley, Hist. Virginia, iv. ¶ 14.

Caucasian walnut, the tree Pterocarya fraxinifolia, marked by its two-winged fruit.—Country walnut. Same as Indian walnut.—Double walnut. See def. 1.—English walnut, European walnut. See def. 1.—Highflier walnut, a variety of the common walnut, said to be the best in England.—Indian walnut, the candleberry, Aleurites Moluccana. Also called Belgaum, country, and Otaheite walnut.—Jamaica walnut, a low West Indian tree, Picrodendron baccatum, bearing a small ovoid-globose orange-yellow fruit.—Lemon walnut. See lemon-walnut.—Otaheite walnut. Same as Indian walnut.—Rock-walnut, a moderate or small tree, Juglans rupestris, found from Texas—where it is generally reduced to a low much-branching shrub—to Arizona and Mexico, growing along streams and in mountain cañons. Its wood is of a dark-brown color, susceptible of polish. Its nuts are small, sweet, and edible.—Shagbark or shellbark walnut. See def. 3.—Titmouse walnut, a variety of the common walnut with a shell so thin as to be broken by the titmouse and other birds.—Walnut case-bearer, an American phycitid moth, Mineola juglandis, whose small green larva constructs a black case between the leaves of the walnut.—Walnut catchup. See catchup.—Walnut leaf-roller, either of two tortricid moths, Archips rileyana and Eulia juglandana, whose larvæ roll the leaves of walnut and hickory in the United States. See cut under Tortrix.—Walnut sword-tail, a dull-brown tree-hopper, Uroxiphus caryæ, occurring on the foliage of walnut and hickory in the United States.—White walnut, the butternut, Juglans cinerea, sometimes called oil-nut and lemon-walnut.

walnut-moth (wâl′nut-môth), n. Any moth whose larva feeds on walnut, as the regal walnut-moth, Citheronia regalis, whose larva is known as the hickory horned devil. See cut under royal.

walnut-oil (wâl′nut-oil), n. See walnut, 1.

walnut-scale (wâl′nut-skāl), n. Aspidiotus juglans-regiæ, a flat gray scale-insect found on the bark of the larger limbs of walnut in the United States.

walnut-tree (wâl′nut-trē), n. Seo walnut.

walpurgine (wol-pėr′jin), n. Same as walpurgite.

Walpurgis night (väl-pör′gis nīt). [G. Walpurgis nacht, so called with ref. to the day of St. Walpurgis, Walburgis, or Walpurga, the name of an abbess who emigrated from England to Germany in the 8th century.] The night before the first day of May, on which, according to German popular superstition, witches are said to ride on broomsticks, he-goats, etc., to some appointed rendezvous, especially the Brocken in the Harz Mountains, where they hold high festival with their master the devil.

walpurgite (wol-pėr′jīt), n. A hydrated arsenate of uranium and bismuth, occurring in thin scale-like crystals of a yellow color. It is found with other uranium minerals at Neustädtel in Saxony. Also walpurgine.

walrus (wol′rus), n. [= D. walrus = G. walross, < Sw. hvalross = Dan. hvalros, lit. 'whale-horse,' equiv. to Icel. hross-hvalr = AS. horshwæl, lit. 'horse-whale,' a name prob. alluding to the noise made by the animal, somewhat resembling a neigh, = Sw. Dan. hvalfisk: see whale[1] and horse[1]. Cf. whalefish and narwhal.] Any member of the family Trichechidæ (or Odobænidæ); a very large pinniped carnivorous mammal, related to the seals, having in the male enormous canine teeth protruding like tusks from the upper jaw. The common walrus, Odobænus rosmarus, the morse, or sea-horse, attains a total length of 10 to 12 feet in the full-grown male; individuals are reported to exceed 14 feet; a more nearly average length is 8 to 10 feet, with a girth of about as much. A weight of 2,500 to 3,000 pounds is acquired by old bulls, with a yield of 500 pounds of blubber. The whole length of the canines is about 2 feet, when they are full-grown, with a projection of 15 inches or more. These teeth are used in digging for the clams which form the principal food of the animal, and in climbing over uneven surfaces of rock or ice. A walrus 12 feet long has the fore flippers 2 feet long by about 1 foot broad; the hind each about this length, but 2½ feet in extreme breadth when pressed out flat. The mammæ of the female are two pairs, respectively abdominal and inguinal. Young and middle-aged individuals of both sexes are covered with a short coarse hair of a yellowish-brown color, deepening into dark reddish-brown on the belly and at the bases of the limbs. Old animals, especially the bulls, become almost naked, and the skin grows heavily wrinkled and plaited, especially on the fore quarters. In the glacial period the walrus ranged in North America southward on the Atlantic coast to South Carolina. There is no evidence of its existence in New England since about 1550; from this date to 1600 it lived south to Nova Scotia. It now inhabits some parts of Labrador, shores of Hudson's Bay, Greenland, and arctic regions as far north as Eskimos live or explorers have gone. It has been practically exterminated on the arctic coast of Europe as well as on the islands of Spitzbergen and Nova Zembla. It is readily captured, and the systematic destruction to which it has long been subjected has materially diminished its numbers in many different places. The blubber yields a valuable oil; from the hide a very tough and durable leather is made; and the tusks yield a superior ivory. The walrus of the North Pacific is now generally thought to be specifically distinct, and is known as T. or O. obesus, and Cook's walrus. It attains even greater size and weight than the common morse, and the hide is extremely rough. See also cuts under tusk and rosmarine.

Pacific or Cook's Walrus (Trichechus or Odobænus obesus).

walrus-bird (wol′rus-bėrd), n. [Translation of the Eskimo name.] The pectoral sandpiper, Tringa (Actodromas) maculata: so called from its puffing out its breast like a walrus during the breeding-season. See cut under sandpiper. [Recent.]

walsh[1] (wolsh), a. Same as wallowish.

Walsh[2]†, a. and n. An obsolete form of Welsh. It survives in the surname Walsh.

Walshia (wol′shi-ä), n. [NL. (Clemens, 1864), named after B. D. Walsh (1808–69), an American entomologist.] A curious genus of moths, of the family Tineidæ, having the fore wings with large thick tufts of scales, and the submedian and internal nervures obsolete. Only one species, W. amorphella, is known. Its larva makes a gall on the stems of the false indigo, Amorpha fruticosa, and the moth has also been reared from similar galls at the base of the stem of one of the so-called loco-weeds or crazy-weeds of the western United States.

walty (wol′ti), a. [< walt + -y[1].] Unsteady; crank: noting a vessel. [Rare.]

> A new ship, . . . of about 150 tuns, but so walty that the master (Lamberton) often said she would prove their grave. J. Pierpont, in C. Mather's Mag. Chris., I. vi.

waltz (wâlts), n. [= F. valse (> E. valse), < G. walzer, a round dance, waltz, < walzen, roll: see walt, v.] 1. A round dance, probably of Bohemian origin, which has been extraordinarily popular since the latter part of the eighteenth century. It is danced by couples, the partners in each couple moving together in a series of whirling steps—either advancing continuously in the same direction, or varying this with "reversing" or turning the opposite way. The regular form of the waltz is known as the trois-temps—the more rapid form deux-temps containing six steps to every two of the other. The derivation of the waltz is disputed, the French often claiming its descent from the volta, and the Germans from the allemande; but it is probably a development of the slow and simple ländler. Its popularity has decidedly overshadowed that of all other fashionable dances.

2. Music for such a dance, or in its rhythm, which is triple and moderately quick. Waltzes are usually made up of sections of eight or sixteen measures. Several such sections are often written to be performed in succession, and are then provided with an introduction and a coda.—Deux-temps waltz. See deux-temps.

waltz (wâlts), v. i. [< waltz, n.] 1. To dance a waltz, or in the movement or step of a waltz.

Some waltz, some draw, some fathom the abyss Of metaphysics. Byron, Don Juan, xii. 52.

2. To move lightly or trippingly or swiftly as in a waltz: as, the young people waltzed into the room. [Slang.]

waltzer (wâlt'sėr), n. [< waltz + -er[1].] A person who waltzes; also a waltzing mouse.

It may be said, without vanity, that I was an apt pupil, and . . . in a single week I became an expert waltzer. Thackeray, Fitz-Boodle's Confessions, Dorothea.

waluewite (wal'ū-īt), n. [Named from P. A. von Waluew, a Russian.] A variety of xanthophyllite, occurring in tabular crystals of a dull-green color. It is found in the Zlatoust mining region in the Urals.

walwe†, v. A Middle English form of wallow[1]. waly[1], walie (wâ'li), a. and n. [An extension of wale[2], a., perhaps mixed with ME. wely, weli, < AS. welig, rich, wealthy, < wel, well: see well[2].] I. a. 1. Beautiful; excellent.

[Scotch in all senses.]

waly[2] (wā'li), interj. [An abbr. var. of wellaway.] An interjection expressive of lamentation; alas! [Obsolete or Scotch.]

O waly, waly up the bank,
And waly, waly down the brae,
And waly, waly yon burn side,
Where I and my love wont to gae.
Waly, Waly, but Love be Bonny (Child's Ballads, IV. 133).

wamara (wä'ma-rä), n. [Native name.] The brown ebony of British Guiana. See ebony.

wamble (wom'bl), v. i.; pret. and pp. wambled, ppr. wambling. [Also dial. wammel, wammle; < ME. wamlen, < Dan. vamle, feel nausea (cf. vammel, mawkish); freq. of the verb seen in Icel. væma = Sw. vämjas, refl., loathe, nauseate.] 1. To rumble, heave, or be disturbed with nausea: said of the stomach.

What availeth to haue good meate, when onely the sight thereof moueth belkes, and makes the stomach wamble? Guevara, Letters (tr. by Hellowes, 1577), p. 132.

Some sighing elegie must ring his knell, Unlesse bright sunshine of thy grace revive
His wambling stomack.
Marston, Scourge of Villany, viii.

2. To rumble; ferment, and make a disturbance.

And your cold sallads, without salt or vinegar,
Lie wambling in your stomachs.
Fletcher, Mad Lover, i. 1.

[Obsolete or provincial in both uses.]

wamble (wom'bl), n. [< wamble, v.] A rumbling, heaving, or similar disturbance in the stomach; a feeling of nausea. [Obsolete or provincial.]

wampee (wom-pē'), n. [Also whampee; Chinese, < hwang, yellow, + pi, skin.] 1. The fruit of a tree, Claucena Wampi, of the Rutaceæ, tribe Aurantieæ, thus allied to the orange. The native country of the tree is unknown, but it is cultivated in China, the Philippines, and Malaya for the fruit, which is borne in clusters, and is of the size and somewhat the taste of a grape, with an additional pleasant flavor of its own. The tree is of a sweet terebinthine odor, its leaves pinnate with five to nine smooth and shining leaflets.

2. See Pontederia.

wampish (wom'pish), v. t. [Origin obscure.] To toss about in a threatening, boasting, or frantic manner; wave violently; brandish; flourish. Scott. [Scotch.]

wampum (wom'pum), n. [Formerly also wampom, wampame, wompam; probably a reduction of Narraganset wampumpeag, white string of beads.] Small shell beads pierced and strung, used as money and for ornament by the North American Indians. The shell was cut away, leaving only a cylinder like a European bugle. Wampum was of two kinds, white and black or dark-purple. An imitation of wampum consisting of white porcelain beads of the same shape has been made by Europeans for sale to the Indians. See the second quotation under wampumpeag.

Ye said Narigansets . . . should pay . . . 2000 fathome of good white wampame. Bradford, Plymouth Plantation, p. 437.

Sachems of Long Island came voluntarily, and brought a tribute to us of twenty fathom of wampom, each of them. Winthrop, Hist. New England, I. 283.

The Indians are ignorant of Europes Coyne; yet they have given a name to ours, and call it monèash from the English money. Their owne is of two sorts: one white, which they make of the stem or stocke of the Periwincle, which they call Meteaûhock, when all the shell is broken off: and of this sort six of their small Beads (which they make with holes to string the bracelets) are currant with the English for a Peny. The second is black, inclining to blew, which is made of the shell of a fish, which some English call Hens, Poquaûhock, and of this sort three make an English peny. . . . This one fathom of this their stringed money, now worth of the English but five shillings (sometimes more), some few yeeres since was worth nine, and sometimes ten shillings per Fathome. . . . Obs: Their white they call Wompam (which signifies white): their black Suckanhock (Sácki signifying blacke). Both amongst themselves, as also the English and Dutch, the blacke peny is two pence white. Roger Williams, Key to Amer. Lang., xxiv.

Striped wampum, a kind of wampum-snake, Abastor erythrogrammus of North America.

wampumpeag (wom'pum-pēg), n. [Narraganset, < wompi, white, + peag, strung beads.] Strings of (originally white) wampum formerly used as tokens of value by the American Indians, and by the whites, especially in trade with the Indians.

He gave to the governour a good quantity of wampompeague. Winthrop, Hist. New England, I. 143.

There was no currency, before this time, . . . unless we choose to give the name of currency to the wampum, or wampumpeage (as it is more properly called), of the Indians. . . . Peage was the name of the substance, which was of two kinds—black and white. Wampum, or wompum, is the Indian word for white, and as the white kind was the most common, wampumpeage got to be the common name of this substance, which was usually abbreviated into wampum. The black peage consisted of the small round spot in the inside of the shell, which is still usually called in this neighborhood by its Indian name of quahog. These round pieces were broken away from the rest of the shell, brought to a smooth and regular shape, drilled through the center, and strung on threads. The white peage was the twisted end of several small shells, broken off from the main part. These portions of shell, thus strung, were worn as bracelets and necklaces, and wrought into belts of curious workmanship. They thus possessed an intrinsic value with the natives, for the purposes of ornament; and they were readily taken by them in exchange for their furs. E. Everett, Orations, I. 124.

wampum-snake (wom'pum-snāk), n. The red-bellied snake, Farancia abacura, a harmless colubrine serpent of the United States. See cut under Farancia.

wamsutta (wom-sut'ä), n. Cotton cloth made at the Wamsutta Mills, New Bedford, Massachusetts.

Wandering abscess, a chronic abscess which burrows through the tissues, usually in obedience to the law of gravity, and appears on the surface at some distance from its point of origin.—Wandering cells, the leucocytes; cells resembling, and probably identical with, the white blood-corpuscles, found in the tissues outside of the blood-vessels.—Wandering Jew. (a) A legendary character who, according to one version (that of Matthew Paris, dating from the thirteenth century), was a servant of Pilate, by name Cartaphilus, and gave Christ a blow when he was led out of the palace to execution. According to a later version he was a cobbler named Ahasuerus, who refused Christ permission to sit down and rest when he passed his house on the way to Golgotha. Both legends agree in the sentence pronounced by Christ on the offender, "Thou shalt wander on the earth till I return." A prey to remorse, he has since wandered from land to land without being able to find a grave. The story has been turned to account by many poets and novelists. (b) A plant-name: (1) The beefsteak- or strawberry-geranium, Saxifraga sarmentosa; locally, the Kenilworth ivy, Cymbalaria Cymbalaria. [Great Britain.] (2) One of two or three house-plants, as Zebrina pendula, which are planted in baskets or vessels of water, from which they spread in a straggling fashion. Z. pendula has lance-ovate or oblong leaves which are crimson beneath and green or purplish above, with two broad silvery stripes. The term seems to have been originally applied to the armed assemblies of freemen; and there is possibly an allusion to a practice of taking up or "touching" the arms. Wapentake is still a territorial division in Yorkshire.

It is written that King Allured, or Alfred, who then raigned, did devide the realme into shires, and the shires into hundrethes, and the hundrethes into rapes or wapentakes, and the wapentakes into tithinges, Soe that tenn tithinges made an hundrethe, and five made a lathe or wapentake. Spenser, State of Ireland.

The wapentake is found only in the Anglian districts. . . . To the north of these districts the shires are divided into wards, and to the south into hundreds. Hence the wapentake may be a relic of Scandinavian occupation.
Stubbs, Const. Hist., § 45.

wapiti (wop'i-ti), n. [Also wappiti, wapite, wappite; < American Indian (Cree) wapitew, dirty white, grayish, in allusion to the animal's color; used as E., and also in the NL. form Cervus wapiti, by B. S. Barton, in 1809, for the animal defined.] The North American stag or elk, Cervus canadensis, which is the North American representative of the stag or red deer of Europe, and resembles the latter, though it is much larger and of a stronger make, being one of the largest living representatives of the family Cervidæ. Wapiti is chiefly a book-name of this deer, which has generally been known since about 1809 as the elk—a name applied in Europe to a very different animal, corresponding to that called moose in North America. (See elk[1] (with cut), moose, stag.) The full-grown male wapiti may exceed a height of 16 hands at the withers, and acquire a weight of more than 1,000 pounds, though not averaging over 600; the form is short for its stature. The coat is some shade of yellowish-gray or brownish-gray, darkening to chestnut-brown on the head, neck, and limbs, even blackening on the belly; on the rump is a white patch bordered with black and extending into the groin; the tail is extremely short. The antlers are very long, with comparatively slender, cylindric, and regularly curved beam, giving off in front the brow- and bez-antlers close together, the royal at end of first third of the beam, a large sur-royal at end of second third, and then forking dichotomously (only exceptionally acquiring any palmation like the crown of the European stag). A pair of good-sized antlers may weigh, with the skull, 50 or 60 pounds, measure 4 or 5 feet along the curve of the beam, and spread 3 or 4 feet apart. The venison is well flavored and highly nutritious. The wapiti has inhabited North America from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and from Mexico to about 57° in the interior; but it has been hunted out of nearly all its range, and is now found chiefly in the Rocky Mountain region of the United States, especially of the Upper Missouri and Yellowstone rivers. It is gregarious, goes in herds or droves sometimes of many hundreds, is slaughtered with little difficulty, and would soon become extinct were no measures taken for its preservation.

war[1] (wâr), n. [Early mod. E. warre; < ME. wer, werr, were, werre, weorre, wyrre,* < late AS. werre (also cited in AL. as war*, in comp. warscot), < OF. werre, guerre, F. guerre = Pr. guerra, gerra = Sp. Pg. It. guerra, war, < ML. werra, war, < OHG. werra, vexation, strife, controversy, confusion, broil (= MD. werre = MLG. werre, strife, war, hostility), < werran (fir-werran), MHG. werren (ver-werren), G. wirren (verwirren), confuse, entangle, embroil, = MD. werren (ver-werren), embroil, entangle; akin to E. worse: see worse, and cf. war[2], ult. a var. of worse. The F. guerre appears in the phrase nom de guerre, and the Sp. in the dim. guerrilla. Hence war[1], v., warray, warrior, etc.] 1. A contest beween nations or states (international war), or between parties in the same state (civil war), carried on by force of arms. International or public war is always understood to be authorized by the sovereign powers of the nations engaged in it; when it is carried into the territories of the antagonist it is called an aggressive or offensive war, and when carried on to resist such aggression it is called defensive. Certain usages or rights of war have come to be generally recognized and defined under the name of the Laws of War, which in general (but subject to some humane restrictions which in recent times have been greatly increased) permit the destruction or capture of armed enemies, the destruction of property likely to be serviceable to them, the stoppage of all their channels of traffic, and the appropriation of everything in an enemy's country necessary for the support and subsistence of the invading army. On the other hand, though an enemy may be starved into surrender, wounding, except in battle, mutilation, and all cruel and wanton devastation are contrary to the usages of war, as are also bombarding an unprotected town, the use of poison in any way, and torture to extort information from an enemy: but it is admitted that an enemy may be put to death for certain acts which are in themselves not criminal, and it may be even highly patriotic and praiseworthy, but are injurious to the invaders, such as firing on the invaders although not regularly enrolled in an organized military force, or seeking to impair the invaders' lines of communication.

> "After this werr," quod she, "God send vs pece." > Generydes (E. E. T. S.), l. 900.

Learning and art, and especially religion, weave ties that make war look like fratricide, as it is.
Emerson, War.

2. A state of active opposition, hostility, or contest: as, to be at war (that is, engaged in active hostilities).

> Mine eye and heart are at a mortal war.
> Shak., Sonnets, xlvi.
>
> A wounded thing with a rancorous cry,
> At war with myself and a wretched race.
> Tennyson, Maud, x. 2.

3. Any kind of contest or conflict; contention; strife: as, a wordy war.—4. The profession of arms; the art of war.

> Nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more. Isa. ii. 4.
>
> War is our bus'ness, but to whom is giv'n
> To die, or triumph, that determine heav'n!
> Pope, Iliad, xxii. 171.

5. Forces; army. Compare battle. [Poetical.]

> O'er the embattled ranks the waves return
> And overwhelm their war. Milton, P. L., xii. 214.
>
> In this array the war of either side
> Through Athens passed with military pride.
> Dryden, Pal. and Arc., iii. 101.

6. Warlike outfit.

> His Complement of Stores, and total War.
> Prior, Henry and Emma.

[War is sometimes used in the plural form with the same signification as it has in the singular.

> I'll to the Tuscan wars. Shak., All's Well, ii. 3. 290.]

2. Specifically, any one of a great number of small oscine passerine birds, or dentirostral insessorial birds, of different families and many different genera, of both the Old World and the New. Especially — (a) A bird of the group composing the family Sylviidæ, or Old World warblers, with scarcely any representatives in America. This is one of the most extensive and varied groups of its grade in ornithology, now generally rated as only a subfamily (Sylviinæ) of Turdidæ. These warblers are all small, active, sprightly birds, and many are remarkable for the clearness, sweetness, and flexibility of their song. Among typical warblers of the subfamily Sylviinæ may be noted the species of Sylvia, the leading genus, as the blackcap and whitethroat; of Melizophilus, as the Dartford warbler; of Regulus, as the goldcrest; of Phylloscopus, as the willow-warbler; of Aëdon, as the rufous warbler; of Hypolais, as the icterine warbler; of Acrocephalus, as the reed- or sedge-warbler; of Locustella, as the grasshopper-warbler; of Cettia, as Cetti's warbler. Besides these, the accentor or hedge-sparrow, the nightingale (Daulias luscinia), the redbreast (Erythacus rubecula), the bluethroat, redstart, whinchat, stonechat, etc., have been brought under the definition of warbler, as members of the sylviine group. (b) In the United States, a bird of a different family, the American warblers, Dendrœcidæ or Mniotiltidæ, a smaller and more compact group than the Sylviidæ, though the species are still very numerous and diversified. Few of them are noted for musical ability. The leading representatives of the American warblers are the numerous wood-warblers of the genus Dendrœca; the worm-eating warblers, Helmitherus and Helminthophaga; the creeping warblers, Mniotilta and Parula; the ground-warblers, as Geothlypis; the chat, Icteria; the water-thrushes, Seiurus; the fly-catching warblers, Myiodioctes, Setophaga, and many others. The commonly accepted form of Dendrœca is Dendroica.

3. In bagpipe music, an appoggiatura, or similar melodic embellishment.

In the music performed upon this instrument [the bagpipe] the players introduce among the simple notes of the tune a kind of appoggiatura, consisting of a great number of rapid notes of peculiar embellishment, which they term warblers. Encyc. Brit., III. 235.

Adelaide's warbler, Dendrœca adelaidæ (Baird, 1865), the representative in Porto Rico of Grace's and of the yellow-throated warbler. — African warbler† (Latham, 1783), the type species of the genus Sphenœacus, S. africanus. Also called spotted yellow flycatcher by Latham, formerly Muscicapa afra, Motacilla or Sylvia africana, etc., and also placed in the genus Drymœca by some authors. — Alpine warbler† (Latham, 1783), a kind of hedge-warbler, Accentor alpinus, of central and southern Europe, occasionally found in Great Britain. This bird was also called collared stare by Latham the same year, having been described by Scopoli in 1769 as Sturnus collaris. — Aquatic warbler (Latham, 1783), one of the reed-warblers, probably Acrocephalus aquaticus: formerly called Sylvia or Salicaria or Calamodyta aquatica. — Audubon's warbler, Dendrœca auduboni, the western representative of the yellowrump or myrtle-bird, and equally abundant. It differs chiefly in having the throat yellow instead of white. Also called western yellowrump. — Autumnal warbler, the young of the bay-breasted warbler, mistaken for a distinct species. A. Wilson, 1811. — Azure warbler, the cerulean warbler. — Babbling warbler† (Latham, 1783), the lesser whitethroat, Sylvia curruca. See whitethroat, 1. — Bachman's warbler [named after the American naturalist John Bachman (1790–1874)], Helminthophaga bachmani of the southern United States and some of the West Indies. (Audubon, 1834.) It is one of the swamp-warblers, and still very rare, though it has been quite recently found to be common in some localities. — Barred warbler, Sylvia nisoria of Europe, Asia, and Africa. — Bay-breasted warbler, Dendrœca castanea of eastern parts of North America. The adult male has the whole breast chestnut. — Belted warbler†, the yellow-rumped warbler. Latham, 1783; Pennant, 1785. — Black-and-white warbler, the creeping warbler, Mniotilta varia: more fully called black-and-white creeping warbler or creeper, also white-poll warbler. See cut under Mniotilta. — Black-and-yellow warbler, Dendrœca maculosa. See cut under spotted. — Blackburnian warbler, Dendrœca blackburniæ, the prometheus warbler, in adult plumage extensively black varied with white, the breast and some parts about the head of a flaming orange. It is the most richly colored of the warblers, and is common in many parts of North America. It was named by Latham in 1783 after a Mrs. Blackburn of London. — Black-capped warbler, the blackcap, Sylvia (oftener Curruca) atricapilla, of nearly all Europe, and parts of Asia and Africa. — Black-headed warbler†, the American redstart, Setophaga ruticilla. See cut under redstart. Latham, 1793; Pennant, 1785. — Black-poll warbler, Dendrœca striata, when adult having the whole crown black, the upper parts olivaceous streaked with black, and the under parts white streaked with black along the sides. In young plumage it is hardly to be distinguished from the bay-breasted warbler. It is very wide-ranging, from Greenland and Alaska through most of America (probably to Chili). It was originally described in 1772 by J. R. Forster from Hudson's Bay as the striped flycatcher. — Black-throated blue warbler, Dendrœca cærulescens, of eastern North America, remarkable for the unusual difference of the sexes in plumage. The male is blue, white below, with black throat and a peculiar white space on the wing; the female is chiefly greenish above and yellowish below, with traces of the characteristic wing-mark. — Black-throated gray warbler, Dendrœca nigrescens, of western parts of the United States and Mexico. The adult male is bluish-ash above with a few black streaks, below white streaked on the sides with black, the head black with white stripes and a small bright-yellow spot before the eye. — Black-throated green warbler, Dendrœca virens, one of the most abundant wood-warblers of eastern North America. The adult male is olivaceous-green above, below extensively black, with much golden yellow on the sides of the head, and white on the wings and tail. The length is 5 inches. It is one of a group of warblers having several representatives in western North America. See cut under Dendrœca. — Black-throated warbler, the black-throated blue warbler. Latham, 1783; Pennant, 1785. — Blanford's warbler, Sylvia blanfordi, of which only one specimen is known, from Abyssinia. Seebohm. — Bloody-side or bloody-sided warbler†. (a) The chestnut-sided warbler. Pennant, 1785. (b) One of the golden warblers, Dendrœca ruficapilla, of the West Indies. Latham, 1783. — Blue-eyed yellow warbler, the summer yellow-bird, Dendrœca æstiva. — Blue golden-winged warbler, Helminthophaga chrysoptera, a common swamp-warbler of the eastern United States and Canada. See cut under Helminthophaga. — Blue-green warbler, the cerulean warbler in immature plumage, or the female of that species. — Blue Mountain warbler, an American warbler so named by A. Wilson in 1812, and never since identified. It was found in the Blue Mountains of Pennsylvania. — Blue-throated warbler (Latham, 1783), the bluethroat, originally described by Edwards in 1743 as the bluethroat redstart, later variously called Motacilla suecica, Sylvia suecica, Sylvia cyanecula, Cyanecula suecica, etc., all of which names are shared by a related species or variety. See cut under bluethroat. — Blue-winged yellow warbler, Helminthophaga pinus, a common swamp-warbler of the eastern parts of the United States, originally described by Edwards (before Linnæus) as the pine-creeper. — Blue yellow-backed warbler, Parula (or Compsothlypis) americana. See Parula. — Bonaparte's fly-catching warbler, the young of the Canadian fly-catching warbler, mistaken by Audubon for a different species in 1831, and dedicated to Prince Charles Lucien Bonaparte (1803–57). — Booted warbler, a tree-warbler, Hypolais caligata. — Bourbon warbler† (Latham, 1783), the yellow-rumped creeper (Latham, 1781); a white-eye or silver-eye, Zosterops borbonica, peculiar to the Island of Réunion. — Bowman's warbler, Sylvia mystacea of Persia, Palestine, and Abyssinia. — Bush-warblers, the members of the genus Cettia, having only ten rectrices. There are about 12 species, with one exception confined to Asia. The exception is Cetti's warbler, C. cetti, which extends throughout the Mediterranean region, and was originally described in 1776, by the naturalist whose name it bears, as usignuolo di fiume, which became the buscarle of Buffon and Daubenton. See cut under Cettia. — Caffrarian warbler† (Latham, 1783), the so-called red-tailed thrush of Latham (1783), formerly Motacilla or Sylvia caffra, now known as Cossypha caffra (and Bessonornis phœnicurus). — Canadian fly-catching warbler, Myiodioctes canadensis, abundant in eastern parts of North America. Also called Canada and spotted flycatcher. The upper parts are bluish-ash varied with black, and the under parts are yellow with black streaks on the breast. — Canadian warbler. (a) The black-throated blue warbler. (b) The Canadian fly-catching warbler. — Cape May warbler, Dendrœca tigrina, formerly Sylvia maritima: so named by A. Wilson, in 1812, from a locality in New Jersey where he found it. In full plumage it is one of the handsomest of the wood-warblers, and has peculiarities which have caused a genus (Perissoglossa) to be based upon it. — Carbonated warbler, an American warbler so named by Audubon in 1831, and never since identified. More fully called carbonated swamp-warbler, also dusky warbler. — Cerulean warbler. See cerulean. — Cetti's warbler, one of the bush-warblers. — Chestnut-bellied warbler† (Latham, 1783), an Asiatic redstart, Ruticilla (formerly Sylvia) erythrogastra. — Chestnut-sided warbler, Dendrœca pennsylvanica of the eastern United States and Canada, having, when adult, the under parts pure-white with a chain of chestnut streaks along each side, and the crown rich-yellow. — Chiff-chaff warbler, Phylloscopus rufus. See cut under chiff-chaff. — Children's warbler†, the female or young summer yellow-bird, Dendrœca æstiva. Audubon, 1831. — Cingalese warbler† (Latham, 1783), the green warbler of Brown (1776) and yellow-bellied creeper of Latham (1787), one of the Nectariniidæ, Anthothreptes phœnicotis, extending from Bhutan to Malacca and the Sunda Islands, but not known in Ceylon. — Cisticoline warbler, a grass-warbler; one of a very large and loose group of Old World warbler-like birds, of which the leading genera, in numbers of species, are Cisticola or Drymœca, with twelve rectrices, and Prinia with ten (as in the genus Cettia). The group is badly defined, and is now generally thrown into the so-called ornithological waste-basket (Timeliidæ). Most of the species of the three genera named have been placed in each of the others, and Drymœca has practically included the members of both. Among notable members of the group are the tailor-warblers or tailor-birds (see Orthotomus, Sutoria, and tailor-bird, with cuts), with twelve rectrices, and the species of Suya (which see), with ten rectrices. The group is best developed in Africa and Asia. Cisticola cursitans (with thirty technical synonyms) extends from southern Europe, throughout Africa and through the warmer parts of Asia, to the Indo-Malayan islands; C. subruficapilla (with more than thirty synonyms) inhabits most of Africa. — Citrine warbler† (Latham, 1783), the remarkable New Zealand Acanthisitta chloris. See Xenicidæ. — Citron warbler, the summer yellow-bird, Dendrœca æstiva. Swainson and Richardson, 1831. — Connecticut warbler, Oporornis agilis, a ground-warbler so named by Wilson in 1812, common in eastern parts of the United States, especially in the fall. — Creeping warblers, the American warblers of the genera Mniotilta and Parula. See cut under Mniotilta. — Dartford warbler (Latham, 1783), the Motacilla undata of Boddaert, 1783 (based on the pittechou of Daubenton, Planches Enluminées, 665, fig. 1, 1788), also called Sylvia provincialis, S. undata, S. dartfordiensis, S. ferruginea, etc., and type of the genus Melizophilus (which see, with cut), a warbler found from England and France to northern Africa and Palestine.—Daurian warbler† (Latham, 1783), the Daurian redstart, Ruticilla (formerly Sylvia) aurorea, inhabiting most of Asia and some of the adjacent islands.—Desert-warbler, Sylvia nana, characteristic of arid wastes from Algeria to Persia and other parts of Asia.—Dusky warbler†. (a) A bird so named by Latham in 1783, but never identified. It is supposed to be a species of Prinia or of Drymœca. (b) The yellow-rumped warbler. Pennant, 1785. Also umbrose warbler. (c) The carbonated warbler. Nuttall, 1832.—Dwarf warbler† (Latham, 1783), Acanthiza pusilla, a warbler-like bird of Australia.—Equinoctial warbler† (Latham, 1783), Tatare æquinoctialis, of Christmas Island in the Pacific Ocean. This is closely related to the bird figured under Tatare.—Fat warbler†. Same as grasset warbler.—Flaxen warbler†, a bird so named by Latham in 1783, apparently Prinia mystacea.—Fly-catching warblers, the American warblers of the subfamily Setophaginæ, as the redstart, the species of Myiodioctes, Cardellina, Basileuterus, etc., chiefly of tropical and subtropical regions. See cuts under Myiodioctes and redstart.—Garden warbler, the common European and African Sylvia hortensis, the greater pettichaps. See cut under pettichaps.—Golden-cheeked warbler, Dendrœca chrysoparia, a relative of the black-throated green warbler, found from Texas to Guatemala. Sclater and Salvin, 1860.—Golden-crowned warbler, the yellow-rumped warbler. Latham, 1783; Pennant, 1785. Also golden-crowned flycatcher (the original name, bestowed by Edwards).—Golden swamp-warbler, the prothonotary warbler. See cut under prothonotary.—Golden warblers. See golden.—Gold-wing, gold-winged, or golden-winged warbler, Helminthophaga chrysoptera. See cut under Helminthophaga.—Grace's warbler, Dendrœca graciæ [named by S. F. Baird in 1865 after Grace D. Coues], a wood-warbler resembling D. dominica, discovered in Arizona by Coues in 1864.—Grasset warbler, the yellow-rumped warbler. Latham, 1783; Pennant, 1785.—Grass-warbler. (a) A cisticoline warbler, especially one of the genus Drymœca in a broad sense. (b) Any member of the genus Lusciniola, a small group of about 12 species, chiefly Asiatic, and especially Himalayan, with one species extending into the Mediterranean region, and another in South Africa. There are twelve tail-feathers, the tarsus is scutellate, the wings are short with spurious first primary, and the prevailing colors are russet and olive-brown. The type is L. aëdon (of Pallas). This genus has six other New Latin names.—Great-tailed warbler (Latham, 1783), one of the South African grass-warblers, formerly Sylvia macroura, now known as Prinia (or Drymœca) maculosa.—Green black-capped warbler, Wilson's fly-catching warbler. Nuttall.—Green warbler. (a†) The Cingalese warbler. Brown, 1776. (b) The black-throated green warbler. Latham, 1783; Pennant, 1785.—Ground-warblers, the American warblers of the genera Geothlypis and related forms, as the Maryland yellowthroat. See cut under Geothlypis.—Guira warbler† (Latham), a South American tanager, Nemosia guira.—Hedge-warbler, the hedge-sparrow (of Albin, 1738), Accentor modularis. See cut under Accentor. Latham, 1783.—Hemlock-warbler, the yõung Blackburnian warbler, Sylvia parus of Wilson, Nuttall, and Audubon.—Hooded warbler, the hooded fly-catching warbler, Myiodioctes mitratus, of the eastern parts of the United States. The adult male is of an olivaceous color above, rich-yellow below, the head mostly black with a mask of rich yellow. Also called mitered warbler, Selby's sylvan flycatcher, and hooded titmouse.—Icterine warbler, a tree-warbler, Hypolais icterina.—Jamaica warbler, Dendrœca dominica, the yellow-throated warbler. Latham, 1783.—Kentucky warbler, Oporornis formosa, a ground-warbler so named by Wilson in 1811. It is entirely rich-yellow underneath, olivaceous above, with a black bar on each side of the head, and a yellow mark about the eye. It is common in eastern parts of the United States. More fully called by Audubon Kentucky fly-catching warbler.—Kirtland's warbler, Dendrœca kirtlandi, a rare wood-warbler named in 1852 by S. F. Baird after Dr. Jared P. Kirtland of Ohio, where the bird was discovered, at Cleveland, May, 1851.—Lawrence's warbler [named after George N. Lawrence of New York], Helminthophaga lawrencei. Herrick, 1874.—Long-legged warbler† (Latham, 1783), the remarkable New Zealand Xenicus longipes. See Xenicus.—Long-tailed warbler (Latham, 1783), the tailor-warbler or tailor-bird. See Sutoria.—Louisiana warbler, the blue yellow-backed warbler. Latham, 1783; Pennant, 1785.—Lucy's warbler [named after the daughter of S. F. Baird], Helminthophaga luciæ, of Arizona. J. G. Cooper, 1862. It is clear-ashy, white below, with chestnut crown-patch and upper tail-coverts.—Macgillivray's warbler, Geothlypis macgillivrayi, the western representative of the mourning warbler, more fully called Macgillivray's ground-warbler: originally described by Audubon in 1839, and dedicated to William Macgillivray, a Scotch ornithologist, who wrote most of the technical parts of Audubon's "Ornithological Biography" and "Birds of America."—Magellanic warbler† (Latham, 1783), a South American rock-wren, Scytalopus magellanicus, of the family Pteroptochidæ. See cut under Scytalopus.—Magnolia warbler, the black-and-yellow warbler, described as Sylvia magnolia by A. Wilson in 1811.—Marmora's warbler, Sylvia sarda or Melizophilus sardus, of the Mediterranean region.—Marsh-warbler, one of the reed-warblers, Acrocephalus palustris, of parts of Europe, Asia, and Africa.—Maryland warbler, the Maryland yellow-throat. See cut under Geothlypis.—Maurice warbler† (Latham, 1783), the white-eye or silvereye of Mauritius, Zosterops mauritiana.—Mitered warbler, the hooded warbler. Also called mitered sylvan flycatcher.—Moor warbler†, Pratincola (formerly Sylvia) maura, a whinchat widely distributed in Asia.—Mourning warbler, Geothlypis philadelphia, so named by A. Wilson in 1810 from the black veiled with gray on the breast, as if the bird were wearing crape. It is a common ground-warbler of many parts of North America.—Nashville warbler, Helminthophaga ruficapilla, a common swamp-warbler or worm-eating warbler of most parts of North America, discovered by A. Wilson in 1811, and named after a city in Tennessee.—New York warbler, the New York water-thrush, Seiurus noveboracensis. See cut under Seiurus. Latham, 1783; Pennant, 1785.—Olive warbler. (a) A monotypic American warbler named Sylvia olivacea by J. P. Giraud in 1841; Peucedramus olivaceus of Coues, inhabiting Texas, New Mexico, Arizona, and southward, chiefly of an olivaceous color with orange-brown or deep saffron-yellow head and neck, and a black transocular bar. It is 4¾ inches long. Also olive-backed and orange-breasted warbler. (b) The female of the black-throated blue warbler. P. H. Gosse. [Jamaica.] (c†) The summer yellow-bird, Dendrœca æstiva, in some obscure plumage. Pennant, 1785; Stephens, 1817.—Orange-breasted warbler. Same as olive warbler (a).—Orange-crowned warbler, Helminthophaga celata, named by Thomas Say (1823). It inhabits all of North America, and several varieties are described. The crown has a concealed patch of orange.—Orange-thighed warbler, the Maryland yellowthroat, which in some autumnal and other plumages has the flanks tinged with orange-brown. The adult male is figured under Geothlypis. Pennant, 1785.—Orange-throated warbler. (a) The prothonotary warbler. See cut under prothonotary. Latham, 1783. (b) The Blackburnian warbler.—Orphean warbler, Sylvia orpheus, which, including its variety S. jerdoni, inhabits most of Europe and much of Asia and Africa.—Palestine warbler, Sylvia melanothorax, of Palestine and Cyprus.—Party-colored warbler. (a) The blue yellow-backed warbler. (b) The prairie-warbler. Stephens, 1817.—Pensile warbler, Dendrœca dominica, formerly Sylvia pensilis. Latham, 1783.—Pine-creeping warbler, Dendrœca pinus or vigorsi, one of the commonest wood-warblers of the United States, of an olivaceous color above and yellowish below.—Pine-swamp warbler, the black-throated blue warbler.—Pine-warbler, one of two different American warblers: (a†) The pine-creeper of Edwards, and not of Catesby; the blue-winged yellow warbler, Helminthophaga pinus. Latham, 1783; Pennant, 1785. (b) The pine-creeper of Catesby, 1771; the pine-creeping warbler, Dendrœca pinus or vigorsi. See cut under pine-warbler.—Prothonotary warbler. See prothonotary.—Provincial warbler, the Dartford warbler.—Quebec warbler, the chestnut-sided warbler. Pennant, 1785.—Rathbone's warbler, the summer yellow-bird, Dendrœca æstiva, in some immature plumage. Audubon.—Red-backed warbler, the prairie-warbler. P. H. Gosse. [Jamaica.]—Red-faced or red-fronted warbler, Cardellina rubrifrons, a fly-catching warbler of the southern border of the United States and southward. See Cardellina.—Redstart warbler†, the European redstart, Ruticilla (formerly Sylvia) phœnicura. See cut under redstart.—Red-throated warbler†, the chestnut-sided warbler. Latham, 1783.—Rocky Mountain warbler, Virginia's warbler.—Roscoe's warbler, the Maryland yellowthroat, in some variant plumage. Audubon, 1832.—Ruddy warbler†, the rock-warbler. Latham, 1801.—Rufous-vented warbler† (Latham, 1801), an Australian thick-headed shrike, Pachycephala rufiventris, earlier called by Latham rufous-vented honey-eater, and later by Lewin orange-breasted thrush.—Rufous warbler, Sylvia (or Aëdon) galactodes, of southern Europe and northern Africa.—Rüppell's warbler, Sylvia rueppelli, of southern Europe, Asia Minor, Palestine, and some parts of Africa.—Rush-warbler† (Latham, 1783), an unidentified sparrow of the United States, supposed to be the field-sparrow, Spizella pusilla.—Rusty-sided warbler† (Latham, 1801), the cerulean creeper of the same author and date, Zosterops cerulescens, a white-eye of Australia, New Zealand, and the Chatham Islands.—St. Domingo warbler, Dendrœca dominica, the yellow-throated warbler. Turton, 1806.—Sardinian warbler, Sylvia melanocephala, of the Mediterranean region.—Sennett's warbler [named after George B. Sennett of New York], one of the creeping warblers, Parula nigrilora, of Texas and southward. Coues, 1877.—Siberian warbler (Latham, 1783), the Asiatic Accentor montanellus, occasional in Europe, related to the common hedge-accentor.—Spectacled warbler, Sylvia conspicillata, of the Mediterranean region, extending from Palestine to the Canaries.—Spotted warbler. (a) The Cape May warbler. (b) The black-and-yellow warbler, Dendrœca maculosa. See spotted (with cut).—Spotted yellow warbler. (a) The Cape May warbler. Latham, 1783; Pennant, 1785. These two accounts are the bases of Motacilla tigrina (Gmelin, 1788). (b) Dendrœca maculosa. See cut under spotted.—Streaked warbler (Latham, 1801), an Australian warbler-like bird, formerly Sylvia sagittata, now known as Chthonicola sagittata.—Subalpine warbler, Sylvia subalpina, of southern Europe, northern Africa, and western Asia.—Summer warbler, the summer yellow-bird of North America; one of the golden warblers, Dendrœca æstiva, among the most abundant and familiar warblers of the United States. The adult male is golden-yellow more or less obscured with olivaceous on the back, and has the whole under part streaked with brownish-red. Also called, in various plumages, yellow-poll warbler, olive warbler, citron warbler, yellow warbler, Children's warbler, Rathbone's warbler, etc.—Superb warbler†, either one of two different malurine birds of Australia, Malurus cyaneus and M. lamberti, formerly placed in the genus Sylvia. Latham; Shaw. Also called blue wren.—Swainson's warbler [named after William Swainson, an English quinarian naturalist], Helinaia (or Helonæa) swainsoni, described by Audubon in 1834, and long considered one of the rarest of the American warblers, but lately found abundant in South Carolina.—Sybil warbler†, Pratincola (formerly Sylvia) sybilla, peculiar to Madagascar.—Sylvan warblers, the American fly-catching warblers of the genus Myiodioctes: so called as pertaining to Nuttall's genus Sylvania (1840). See cut under Myiodioctes.—Tennessee warbler, Helminthophaga peregrina, a common swamp-warbler of chiefly eastern parts of North America: named after the State where found by A. Wilson in 1811.—Tolmie's warbler, Macgillivray's warbler. J. K. Townsend, 1839.—Townsend's warbler, Dendrœca townsendi, the western representative of the black-throated green warbler, discovered by Townsend and Nuttall on the Columbia river in 1835, and named after the former by Audubon. It ranges from Alaska to Guatemala, and has been taken near Philadelphia.—Tristram's warbler [named after Canon H. B. Tristram of England], Sylvia deserticola, of the Algerian Sahara.—Umbrose warbler†. Same as dusky warbler (b). Latham, 1783.—Undated warbler†, a bird so named by Latham in 1783, apparently a species of Cisticola.—Vigors's warbler [named after N. A. Vigors, an English quinarian naturalist], the pine-creeping warbler as mistaken for another species. Audubon, 1832. Also called Vigors's vireo (Nuttall, 1832).—Virginia's warbler, Helminthophaga virginiæ: so named by Baird in 1860 after the wife of Dr. W. W. Anderson; the Rocky Mountain warbler.—Western warbler, the hermit-warbler, discovered by J. K. Townsend at Fort Vancouver, May 28th, 1835, and by Thomas Nuttall at about the same time.—White-eyed warbler† (Latham, 1783), the white-eye of Madagascar, Zosterops madagascariensis.—White-poll warbler, the black-and-white warbler. Latham, 1783; Pennant, 1785.—White-throated blue warbler, the cerulean warbler.—White-throated warbler, Helminthophaga leucobronchialis. W. Brewster, 1874.—Wilson's fly-catching warbler [named after Alexander Wilson (1766–1813), the American ornithologist], Myiodioctes pusillus, inhabiting all parts of North America: more fully called Wilson's green black-capped fly-catching warbler, and formerly Sylvia wilsonii (Bonaparte, 1824). It is olivaceous and yellow, having in the adult male a square patch of glossy black on the crown. See cut under Myiodioctes.—Worm-eating warbler. See worm-eating.—Yellow-backed warbler, the blue yellow-backed warbler. Latham, 1783.—Yellow-breast or yellow-breasted warbler, the Maryland yellowthroat, Geothlypis trichas. See cut under Geothlypis. Latham, 1783; Pennant, 1785.—Yellow-browed warbler (Latham, 1783), Phylloscopus superciliosus (formerly Sylvia superciliosa), a common warbler throughout the greater part of Asia, and a straggler in Europe. Called in full the yellow-browed barred willow-warbler. See cut under Phylloscopus.—Yellow-crowned warbler, the chestnut-sided warbler, one of whose early names was Sylvia icterocephala. Stephens, 1817.—Yellow-fronted warbler, the blue golden-winged warbler. Latham, 1783; Pennant, 1785. See cut under Helminthophaga.—Yellow-poll warbler, cut under Helminthophaga.—Yellow-poll warbler, the summer yellow-bird, Dendrœca æstiva. Latham, 1783; Pennant, 1785.—Yellow red-polled warbler. Same as palm-warbler.—Yellow-rumped warbler. (a) Dendrœca coronata, the myrtle-bird (which see) or yellowrump, which abounds in most parts of North America, and has a host of names. It may be recognized by the distinct yellow marks in four places—on the crown, rump, and each side of the breast—the plumage being otherwise chiefly black, white, and bluish-gray when adult, but dingy in the young birds. Also golden-crowned, belted, dusky, umbrose, grasset, etc., warbler, Virginia titmouse, etc. (b) The black-and-yellow warbler, Dendrœca maculosa, which has yellow upper tail-coverts like the preceding, but is otherwise quite different. Latham, 1783. Also called yellow-rumped flycatcher. See cut under spotted.—Yellowtail-warbler, the female or young male of the American redstart, Setophaga ruticilla. See second cut under redstart. Pennant, 1785.—Yellow-throated warbler, Dendrœca dominica, an abundant and beautiful wood-warbler of rather southerly regions of the United States and some of the West India islands and Central America. The throat is rich-yellow. Also yellow-throated gray warbler.—Yellow warbler. (a) The summer yellow-bird, Dendrœca æstiva. See cut under summer warbler. (b) The willow-warbler, Phylloscopus trochilus. (See also grasshopper-warbler, hermit-warbler, palm-warbler, prairie-warbler, reed-warbler, rock-warbler, sedge-warbler, swamp-warbler, tailor-warbler, tree-warbler, willow-warbler, wood-warbler.)

Who but a fool would have faith in a tradesman's ware or his word? Tennyson, Maud, vii.

2. A collective noun used generally in composition with the name of the material, or a term relating to the characters of the articles or the use to which they are put: as, china-ware, tinware, hardware, tableware.—Adams's ware, in ceram., a fine English pottery made at Tunstall, at the end of the eighteenth century, by William Adams, a pupil of Wedgwood. The pieces are often close imitations of the Wedgwood ware.—Agen ware. (a) An inferior kind of Roman pottery, softer and coarser than Samian ware: so called from Agen in the department of Lot-et-Garonne, France, where much of this ware was found with the furnaces. (b) A decorative pottery made in the seventeenth century, many of the pieces having the forms of animals. Erongniart.—Apulian ware. See Apulian pottery (under Apulian), and cut under stamnos.—Aretine ware. See Arretine.—Awata ware, pottery and porcelain made at Awata, near Kioto, Japan. The greater number of the pieces known to be of this manufacture are of yellowish hard paste, with a crackled glaze as if in imitation of Satsuma ware; but a curious and beautiful imitation of old Delft and a thin porcelain of a peculiar grayish white are known.—Bamboo ware, a variety of Wedgwood ware: so named from its color, and otherwise known as cane-colored ware.—Basalt ware. See basalt.—Benares ware, a name given to a kind of ornamental metal-work made in India, in which a pattern is produced by chasing or in other ways depressing the surface of the metal.—Black ware. Same as basalt ware.—Blue jasper ware, a name given to a blue-glazed pottery of modern manufacture, especially that made at Ferrybridge, England.—Böttcher ware. (a) A fine stoneware varying from red to dark brown, and approaching black, invented by the chemist J. F. Böttcher about 1708–9 in the course of his experiments in the search for porcelain. (b) The first real or kaolinic porcelain produced in Europe: it was first made by Böttcher about 1710.—Bristol Delft ware, an enameled pottery made at Bristol throughout the eighteenth century, especially a highly decorated ware in which landscapes, figure-subjects, etc., covering the whole dish, bottom and marly alike, and plates or dishes closely imitated from Chinese enameled porcelain, are included. This decorative Delft has not been manufactured since 1788. Jewitt.—Bristol ware. Same as double-glazed ware.—Caffagiolo ware, a variety of the Italian enameled and painted earthenware known as majolica. It was made in the sixteenth century at a factory belonging to the family of the Medici in the village of Caffagiolo, on the road between Florence and Bologna. The name is also spelled, according to the irregular orthography of the time, Cafagiol, Caffagiulo, Caffaggilolo, Cafagizotto. The marks of this factory are much varied, but generally include the words in Caffagiolo variously spelled. A characteristic mark of these wares is the free use of a dark but extremely brilliant blue often in large masses, also a brilliant but opaque orange, and an opaque Indian red. Metallic luster was early used at Caffagiolo.—Canton lacquer-ware. See lacquer-ware.—Cashan ware. Same as Kashi ware. R. M. Smith, S. K. Handbook, Persian Art.—Castelli ware, pottery made at Castelli, in eastern Italy; specifically, an enameled and richly decorated pottery made during the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries. This magnificent ware preserves some of the characteristics of majolica, but is more pictorial in its decoration, being painted with landscapes, mythological scenes, etc. The colors are often heightened with gold.—Cologne ware, a name commonly given to the hard stoneware of which ornamental jugs, tankards, etc., were made, especially in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries, and formerly called grès de Flandres. The city of Cologne was the chief seat of this manufacture. Compare grès de Flandres (under grès) and stoneware.—Combed ware. See combed.—Coralline ware. See coralline.—Crackled ware. See crackled.—Cream-colored ware, pottery having a cream-colored paste; specifically, a variety of the fine table-ware made by Wedgwood in the latter part of the eighteenth century. This ware was afterward called queen's-ware, from the supposed preference of Queen Charlotte, wife of George III. The term is also applied to Liverpool pottery with transfer printed decorations, made about 1790–1810.—Crystalline ware. See crystalline.—Cullen ware†, Cologne ware.—Delft ware. (a) Pottery made in and near the town of Delft in Holland; specifically, tin enameled ware for use and for decorative purposes. Pottery has been made in this place from ancient times, and dated pieces exist as old as the beginning of the sixteenth century; but the importation from China and Japan of Oriental porcelain stimulated the decorators of later times, so that the richest pieces are of the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries. (b) A name given in England to vessels of pottery for domestic use, especially for table service. (c) Also a stanniferous faience made formerly in England in imitation of the Delft ware of Holland.—Della Robbia ware. (a) A name given to a class of pottery used for works of art in relief: generally asserted to have been invented by Luca della Robbia of Florence in the fifteenth century. It has a hard and well-baked body of brown terra-cotta, upon which a white stanniferous enamel is applied. This is in some cases left white, or white with a background of blue; in others, all parts of the composition are richly decorated with color, especially green, yellow, and purple or maroon. The largest and most elaborate works in Della Robbia ware were made after Luca's death, the most important of all being, perhaps, the frieze on the hospital at Pistoia. Central Italy abounds in the productions of this school of artists, including tabernacles or shrines decorated with sacred subjects, altar-pieces in bas-relief and alto-relief, architectural ornaments, and fountains or lavabos in sacristies of churches and convents. (b) A fine terra-cotta, enameled in colors, made in England for architectural decorations, flower-vases, garden-seats, etc., especially that made at Tamworth at works founded in 1847.—Double-glazed ware, stoneware to which a glaze is applied in liquid form, both inside and outside, before it is fired. Also called Bristol ware.—Egyptian black ware, Egyptian ware. See Egyptian.—Etruscan ware. See Etruscan.—Faenza ware, a name formerly given to Italian majolica. J. C. Robinson, in Cat. of Soulages Coll., 1856. Compare faience.—Glass-glazed ware. See glass-glazed.—Graffito ware. See graffito.—Green-jasper ware, a variety of Wedgwood. The name includes six distinct tints, from pale sea-green to deep olive.—Hollow ware, vessels deeper than flat ware, and especially such as are made in outside molds, which give the external surface—the clay being forced into the mold from within, and worked over with a sponge so as to give it the required thickness and a smooth inner surface.—Incised ware, pottery decorated by scratches upon the surface. Specifically—(a) A coarse earthenware covered with an outer coat of a different color, which, being deeply scratched, shows the body of the ware. (b) A kind of pottery in which the body is scratched or scored, the whole being then covered with a transparent glaze, which shows a deeper color where it fills these incisions than elsewhere.—India ware, a name inaccurately given in England to the more common varieties of Chinese and Japanese porcelains imported into Europe by the East India Company or otherwise.—Kashi ware, pottery made in Persia, and decorated in blue on white in a manner closely resembling Chinese porcelain. So called from Kashan, the chief seat of manufacture. Earthenware is still called "Kashi Kari" in Persia. Also called Kashan, Cashan, and Kachy ware.—Kioto ware, ceramic ware made in or near the city of Kioto in Japan. Immense quantities of pottery and porcelain are made there, and many characteristic varieties are imitated with great success; but the name is given especially to a yellow pottery with crackled glaze peculiar to Japan.—Lapis-lazuli ware. See lapis.—Lava ware. See lava.—Old Fulham ware, a name given to the English imitations of German grès cérame or hard stoneware made at Fulham from about 1670.—Palissy ware, a peculiar kind of pottery, remarkable for its beautiful glaze, the ornamentation being in very high relief, and consisting frequently of models of fish, reptiles, shells, or leaves. Bernard Palissy, a French potter of the sixteenth century, was the designer of this ware. It has been successfully imitated by Barbizet of Paris since 1850, and by others.—Pebble ware. See pebbleware.—Persian ware. See Persian.—Plated ware. See plated.—Plumbeous ware, lead-glazed pottery.—Porphyry ware, a variety of pebbleware. The name is generally given to that variety which is speckled red and black.—Raphael ware, an old name for Italian majolica, taken from the occasional appearance of designs by Raphael, or ascribed to him, painted on majolica plates and other pieces, or perhaps, in some cases, from the use of arabesques similar to those painted under Raphael's direction in the Loggie of the Vatican and elsewhere.—Red porphyry ware, a variety of pebbleware. The name is generally given to pieces which are speckled red and white.—Robbia ware. Same as Della Robbia ware.—Roman red ware. Same as Samian ware.—Rustic, Salopian, Samian, sanitary ware. See the adjectives.—Satsuma ware. (a) Pottery made in the province of Satsuma, in the island of Kiusiu, Japan. It has an extremely hard paste, is pale-yellow or brownish-yellow in color, and is covered with a very minute crackle. (b) A pottery made at Stoke-upon-Trent in England, imitated in the main from the Japanese Satsuma.—Serpentine, Sevillan, sigillated, silicon ware. See the qualifying words.—Sinceny ware, an enameled pottery made in Sinceny, France, in the eighteenth century, decorated with great taste and delicacy, in partial imitation of Rouen ware and later of Chinese ceramic painting, and also in various fantastic styles.—Small ware or wares, textile articles of the tape kind, as narrow bindings of cotton, linen, silk, or woolen fabric; plaited sash-cord, braid, etc.; also, buttons, hooks, eyes, and other dress-trimmings; hence, trifles.

Every one knows Grub street is a market for small ware in wit. Swift, To a Young Poet.

Stamped ware. Same as sigillated ware.—Stanniferous ware, earthenware coated with an enamel of which tin is a principal ingredient. This enamel is used for pottery such as Delft.—Tinned, tortoise-shell, Umbrian ware. See the adjectives.—Tunbridge ware, a species of inlaid or mosaic work in wood. It derives its name from the place of manufacture, Tunbridge in England.—Verd antique ware, a variety of pebbleware, generally veined with dark-green, gray, and black.—Wedgwood ware [named after Josiah Wedgwood (1730–95), the inventor, of Staffordshire, England], a superior kind of semi-vitrified pottery, without much superficial glaze, and capable of taking the most brilliant and delicate colors produced by fused metallic oxids and ochers. This term was applied to useful ware, as distinguished from Wedgwood, the name given to strictly ornamental objects, as vases, medallions, busts, and fancy articles.—Welsh ware, a pottery made at Isleworth, near London in England, from about 1825; a strong and solid earthenware of yellowish-brown color with a transparent glaze.= Syn. Merchandise, etc. See property.

8. Naut., to move into some desired place or position by hauling on a rope or warp which has been fastened to something fixed, as a buoy, anchor, or other ship at or near that place or position: as, to warp a ship into harbor or to her berth.

They warped out their ships by force of hand.
Mir. for Mags., p. 881.

Seeing them warp themselues to windward, we thought it not good to be boorded on both sides at an anchor.
Quoted in Capt. John Smith's Works, II. 41.

9. In agri., to fertilize, as poor or barren land, by means of artificial inundation from rivers which hold large quantities of earthy matter, or warp (see warp, n., 4), in suspension. The operation, which consists in inclosing a body or sheet of water till the sediment it holds in suspension has been deposited, can be carried out only on flat low-lying tracts which may be readily submerged. This system was first systematically practised in Great Britain on the banks of the Trent, Ouse, and other rivers which empty into the estuary of the Humber.

10. To change. [Rare.]

Freeze, freeze, thou bitter sky,
Thou dost not bite so nigh
As benefits forgot;
Though thou the waters warp,
Thy sting is not so sharp
As friend remember'd not.
Shak., As you Like it, ii. 7. 187.

II. intrans. 1. To turn, twist, or be twisted out of straightness or the proper shape.

After the manner of wood that curbeth and warpeth with the fire. Holland, tr. of Plutarch, p. 561.

It 's better to shoot in a bow that has been shot in before, and will never start, than to draw a fair new one, that for every arrow will be warping.
Dekker and Webster, Northward Ho, v. 1.

Ye are green wood, see ye warp not.
Tennyson, Princess, ii.

2. To turn or incline from a straight, true, or proper course; deviate; swerve.

There is our commission,
From which we would not have you warp.
Shak., M. for M., i. 1. 15.

Now, by something I had lately observed of Mr. Treasurer's conversation on occasion, I suspected him a little warping to Rome. Evelyn, Diary, May 17, 1671.

By and by, as soon as the shadow of Sir Francis hath left him, he fals off again warping and warping till he come to contradict himselfe in diameter; and denies flatly that it is either variable or arbitrary, being once settl'd.
Milton, Apology for Smectymnuus.

Whatever these warping Christians might pretend as to zeal for the Law and their ancient Religion, the bottom of all was a principle of infidelity.
Stillingfleet, Sermons, II. iii.

3. To change for the worse; turn in a wrong direction.

Methinks
My favour here begins to warp.
Shak., W. T., i. 2. 365.

4†. To weave; hence, to plot.

Who like a fleering slavish parasite,
In warping profit or a traitorous sleight,
Hoops round his rotten body with devotes.
Marlowe, Hero and Leander, vi.

5. To fly with a twisting or bending to this side and that; deflect the course of flight; turn about in flying, as birds or insects.

As when the potent rod
Of Amram's son, in Egypt's evil day,
Wav'd round the coast, up called a pitchy cloud
Of locusts warping on the eastern wind.
Milton, P. L., i. 341.

6. To wind yarn off bobbins, to form the warp of a web. See the quotation.

Warping, therefore, consists in arranging the threads according to number and colour, or in any special manner that may be necessary, and to keep them in their relative places after they have been so laid.
A. Barlow, Weaving, p. 68.

7. To slink; cast the young prematurely, as cows.—8. Naut., to work forward by means of a rope fastened to something fixed, as in moving from one berth to another in a harbor, or in making one's way out of a harbor in a calm, or against a contrary wind.

I gat out of the Mole of Chio into the sea by warping foorth, with the helpe of Genoueses botes.
Hakluyt's Voyages, II. 101.

warp (wârp), n. [< ME. warp; < warp, v.] 1†. A throw; a cast.—2. Hence, a cast of herrings, haddocks, or other fish; four, as a tale of counting fish. [Prov. Eng.]—3. A cast lamb, kid, calf, foal, or the like; the young of an animal when brought forth prematurely. [Prov. Eng.] —4. The sediment which subsides from turbid water; the alluvial deposit of muddy water artificially introduced into low lands in order to enrich or fertilize them. The term warp is sometimes applied to tidal alluvium. "The Humber warp is a marine and estuarine silt and clay, which occurs above the Peat beds." (Woodward.) As the word is used by J. Trimmer, it has nearly the same meaning as surface-soil. The word is rarely, if ever, used in the United States as meaning a sedimentary deposit.

5. A cast or twist; the twist or bending which occurs in wood in drying; the state of having a cast, or of being warped or twisted.

Somebody in Berkshire, I fancy, had warped his mind against you, and no mind is more capable of warps than his. S. Bowles, in Merriam, II. 337.

6. The threads which are extended lengthwise in a loom, and across which the woof is thrown in the process of weaving.

The ground of the future stuff was formed by a number of parallel strings called the warp, having their upper ends attached to a horizontal beam, and drawn taut by weights hung from their lower ends.
Encyc. Brit., XXIII. 206.

Weaving through all the poor details
And homespun warp of circumstance.
Whittier, Snow-Bound.

7. Naut., a rope, smaller than a cable, used in towing, or in moving a ship by attachment to something fixed; a towing-line.

We furled now for the last time together, and came down and took the warp ashore.
R. H. Dana, Jr., Before the Mast, p. 430.

A warp of weeks, four weeks; a month. [Obsolete or prov. Eng.]

Cerdicus . . . was the first May-lord or captaine of the Morris-daunce that on those embenched shelves stampt his footing, where cods and dog-fish swomme not a warp of weeks forerunning. Nashe, Lenten Stuffe. (Davies.)

To part a warp. Same as to part a line (which see, under line[2]).—Warp-dyeing machine, an apparatus for drawing warp-threads, laid out in sets, through a dye-beck. Each warp is separated from the next by a pin, and the set is passed through the dye between rollers, and delivered from between squeezing-cylinders, which press out the superfluous dye. E. H. Knight.

warpage (wâr'pāj), n. [< warp + -age.] The act of warping; also, a charge per ton made on shipping in some harbors.

war-paint (wâr'pānt), n. 1. Among some savage tribes, paint applied to the face and other parts of the person, according to a recognized and traditional system, as a sign that the wearer is about to engage in war. Its origin may have been an attempt to strike terror to the mind of the enemy.

The war-paint on the Sachem's face,
Unwet with tears, shone fierce and red.
Whittier, Bridal of Pennacook, iii.

2. Hence, full dress and adornment; official costume. [Slang.]

war-path (wâr'pȧth), n. The path or route followed by a warlike expedition; also, the military undertaking itself. Used with reference to the American Indians.—To go on the war-path, to go to war.

"The warrior whose eye is open can see his enemy," said Magua. . . . "I have brought gifts to my brother. His nation would not go on the warpath, because they did not think it well." Cooper, Last of Mohicans, xxviii.

warp-beam (wârp'bēm), n. In a loom, the roller on which the warp-threads are wound, and from which they are drawn as the weaving proceeds. It is placed at the back, opposite the cloth-beam, which receives the finished fabric. E. H. Knight.

warper (wâr'pėr), n. [< warp + -er[1].] 1†. A weaver.—2. One who winds yarn in preparation for weaving, to form the warp of a web.—3. A warping-machine.

warp-frame (wârp'frām), n. In lace-manuf., a machine employing a thread for each needle, the threads being wound on a beam like the warp-beam of a loom (whence the name). Also called warp-net frame.

warrant-officer (wor'ant-of''i-sėr), n. An officer who acts under a warrant from a department of the government, and not from the sovereign or head of the state as in the case of commissioned officers. In the U. S. navy the following warrant-officers are appointed by the President: boatswains, gunners, carpenters, sailmakers, warrant-machinists. Pharmacists are appointed by the secretary of the navy. After six years' service and passing an examination, warrant-officers are given a commission with the rank of ensign and are called chief warrant-officers, as chief boatswain, etc. No corresponding grade of officer exists in the army, but non-commissioned officers, such as sergeants, corporals, etc., receive appointments from regimental or battalion commanders called 'warrants.' They correspond in rank to petty officers in the navy.

warrantor (wor'an-tor), n. [< OF. waranteor, wairenteor*, also garanteor, garantor, garanteur*, etc. (cf. guarantor), < warrantir, warrant: see warrant, v.] One who warrants: correlative of warrantee: a form chiefly used in legal phraseology.

warranty (wor'an-ti), n.; pl. warranties (-tiz). [Formerly also warrantie; < OF. warantie, later garantie (> E. guaranty, guarantee) (= Pr. garentia, guarentia, guerentia = Sp. garantía = Pg. garantia = It. guarentia, ML. reflex warantia), < warantir, warrant: see warrant. Cf. guaranty, guarantee.] 1. Authority; justificatory mandate or precept; warrant.

From your love I have a warranty
To unburden all my plots and purposes.
Shak., M. of V., i. 1. 132.

Nor farther notice, Arete, we crave
Than thine approval's sovereign warranty.
B. Jonson, Cynthia's Revels, v. 3.

There is no scientific warranty for saying that Matter is absolutely indestructible, and more than one consideration indicates that the structure of Matter may be such as to denote that in its present form it has had a beginning and may have an end.
A. Daniell, Prin. of Physics, Int., p. 7.

2†. Security; assurance; guaranty; warrant.

The stamp was a warranty of the public. Locke.

3. In law, a statement, express or implied, of something which the party making it undertakes shall be part of the contract and in confirmation or assurance of a direct object of the contract, but which is yet only collateral to that object. More specifically—(a) In the law of real property: (1) Formerly, a covenant in a grant of freehold, binding the grantor and his heirs to supply other lands of equal value, should the grantee be evicted from those granted by any paramount title. (2) In modern practice, an assurance in a deed that the premises are conveyed in fee simple absolute except as otherwise specified, the effect being that, if the title fail, the grantee is exonerated from paying any purchase-money remaining unpaid, or may recover damages, the grantor's heirs and devisees being liable to the extent only that they may have received assets from the grantor. (b) In the law of insurance, a statement on the part of the insured or the applicant for insurance, forming a part of the contract, and on the actual truth of which, irrespective of its materiality, the validity of the policy depends. (c) In the law of sales, an assurance or engagement by the seller, express or implied, that he will be answerable for the truth of some supposed quality of the thing sold, as its soundness, or its fitness for the buyer's purpose, or its title.—Collateral warranty, in old Eng. law, a warranty which did not come from the same ancestor from whom the lands would have descended, but descended in a line collateral to that of the land: distinguished from lineal warranty, where the land and the warranty were descended from the same ancestor.—General warranty, a warranty against the acts and claims of all persons whomsoever, as distinguished from a warranty against claims of specified persons, called special warranty.—Implied warranty, a warranty not expressed in the contract, but resulting by operation of law from the making of the contract: as, where one sells a thing in his possession, there is an implied warranty on his part that he has ownership.—Lineal warranty. See collateral warranty.—To vouch to warranty. See vouch.

warranty (wor'an-ti), v. t.; pret. and pp. warrantied, ppr. warrantying. [< warranty, n.] To warrant; guarantee.

warray† (wor'ā), v. t. [Early mod. E. also warrey; < ME. werreien, werreyen, < OF. werreier, guerreier*, F. guerroyer = Pr. guerreiar = Sp. guerrear = It. guerreggiare, make war, < werre, guerre, war: see war[1]. Hence ult. warrior.] To wage war upon; invade in arms; ravage or harry, as a country or district.

Well-known and terrific war-whoop.
J. F. Cooper, Last of Mohicans, xxx.

They never raise the war-whoop here,
And never twang the bow.
Bryant, White-Footed Deer.

warwickite (wâr'wik-īt), n. [< Warwick (see def.) + -ite[2].] A borotitanate of magnesium and iron, occurring in dark-brown to black acicular crystals embedded in granular limestone. Named from the locality of its occurrence, near Warwick, New York.

warwolf[1]†, n. Same as werwolf.

warwolf[2] (wâr'wůlf), n. [< war[1] + wolf, or perhaps a particular use of warwolf[1], werwolf.] A military engine used in the early middle ages in the defense of fortresses.

He [Edward I.], with another engine named the warwolf, pierced with one stone, and cut as even as a thread, two vaunt-mures. Camden, Remains, Artillery, p. 206.

The war-wolfs there Hurl'd their huge stones.
Southey, Joan of Arc, viii.

war-worn (wâr'wôrn), a. Worn with military service: especially applied to a veteran soldier, or one grown old in arms.

The stout old general whose battles and campaigns are over, who has come home to rest his war-worn limbs, . . . what must be his feelings? Thackeray, Philip, xvi.

wary[1] (wā'ri), a. [An extended form of ware[1] (< ware[1] + -y[1]), perhaps orig. due to misreading the adv. warely as a trisyllable.] 1. Cautious of danger; carefully watching and guarding against deception, artifices, and dangers; watchful; on the alert against surprise or danger; ever on one's guard.

Be wary then; best safety lies in fear.
Shak., Hamlet, i. 3. 43.

The impv. of the verb of which was is the pret. is contained, unrecognized, in the word wassail. The verb has no connection with is, which is a form of the verb represented by the theme am, nor with be; but it has come to be used to supply the preterit of the verb be. See be[1].] A verb-form used to supply the past tense of the verb be: as, I was, thou wast or wert, he was; we, you, or they were. In the subjunctive, I were, thou wert, he were; we, you, they were, etc.

In war was never lion raged more fierce,
In peace was never gentle lamb more mild.
Shak., Rich. II., ii. 1. 173.

A scene which I should see
With double joy wert thou with me.
Byron, Childe Harold, iii. 55 (song).

Nay, nay, God wot, so thou wert nobly born Thou hast a pleasant presence.
Tennyson, Gareth and Lynette.

The forms wast and wert in the second person singular of the indicative (cf. Icel. vert), and wert in the second person singular of the subjunctive, are modern, being conformed to the model of art. The older form of the second person singular in both moods is were. The ungrammatical combination you was became common in the eighteenth century, but is now condemned.

I was sorry you was disappointed of going to Vallombrosa. H. Walpole, To the Misses Berry, Sept. 25th, 1791.

As I told you when you was here.
Cowper, To Rev. W. Unwin, June 8, 1780.

wase[1] (wāz), n. [< ME. wase, < MD. wase = MLG. wase, a bundle, torch, = Icel. vasi = Sw. Mandeville, Travels, p. 19.

Wash me throughly from mine iniquity, and cleanse me from my sin. Ps. li. 2.

3. To wet copiously, as with water or other liquid; moisten; cover with moisture.

The pride of Italy, that did bestow
On Earth a beauty, washt by silver Po.
Sandys, Travailes, p. 2.

She looks as clear
As morning roses newly washed with dew.
Shak., T. of the S., ii. 1. 174.

4. To lap; lave, as by surrounding water; surround; overflow or dash over or against; sweep, as with flowing water.

Galatia . . . on the North is washed with the Euxine Sea the space of two hundred and fiftie miles.
Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 321.

5. To remove by ablution or by the cleansing action of water; dispel by or as by washing: either literally or figuratively: used with away, off, out, etc.

Go get some water,
And wash this filthy witness from your hand.
Shak., Macbeth, ii. 2. 47.

Be baptized and wash away thy sins. Acts xxii. 16.

Wash the black from the Ethiop's face,
Wash the past out of man or race!
Lowell, Villa Franca.

6. To overwhelm and carry along (in some specified direction) by or as by a rush of water: as, a man washed overboard; debris washed up by the storm; roast beef washed down with ale.

These dainties must be washd downe well with wine,
With sacke & sugar, egges & muskadine.
Times' Whistle (E. E. T. S.), p. 87.

I don't want my wreck to be washed up on one of the beaches in company with devil's-aprons, bladder-weeds, dead horse-shoes, &c. O. W. Holmes, Autocrat, vii.

7. To cover with a watery or thin coat of color; tint lightly, thinly, or evenly, in water-color, with a pigment so mixed as to be very fluid and rapidly and smoothly applied.—8. To overlay with a thin coat or deposit of metal: as, to wash copper or brass with gold.

Those who were cunning in "the Art of making Black Dogs, which are Shillings, or other pieces of Money made only of Pewter, double Wash'd."
J. Ashton, Social Life in the Reign of Queen Anne, II. 225.

9. In mining, metal., etc., to separate from the earthy and lighter matters by the action of water: as, to wash gold; to wash ores. Washing is a common expression used in the most general way, as nearly an equivalent for ore-dressing, or the separation of ore from the gangue with which it is generally mixed. The term washing is, however, more especially used to designate the separation of gold from the detrital formation in which it so frequently occurs. The same term is also commonly employed to designate the process of separating coal from various impurities which frequently occur intermingled with it, such as shale, pyrites, argillaceous iron ore, gypsum, etc. The machines by which this is done are called coal-washers, as machines for washing gold are called gold-washers. Washing is also the term in general use for designating the operation of cleansing the ore when, as is frequently the case, it comes from the mine mixed with clay or dirt (material which cannot properly be called gangue). This is a coarse operation, which is sometimes a necessary preliminary to the operations of sizing and dressing, or concentrating, as sometimes called.—To wash one's hands of. See hand.

II. intrans. 1. To perform the act of ablution on one's own person.

I will go wash;
And when my face is fair, you shall perceive Whether I blush or no. Shak., Cor., i. 9. 69.

2. To cleanse clothes in or with water.

I keep his house; and I wash, wring, brew, bake, scour, dress meat and drink, make the beds, and do all myself.
Shak., M. W. of W., i. 4. 101.

3. To stand the operation of washing without being destroyed, spoiled, or injured: said both of fabrics and of dyes: as, a dress that will not wash; colors that do not wash well.

I had no idea your mousseline-de-laine would have washed so well. Why, it looks just out of the shop.
C. Reade, Love me Little, x.

4. Hence, to stand being put to the proof; stand the test; prove genuine, reliable, trustworthy, capable, or fit, when submitted to trial. [Colloq.]

He's got pluck somewhere in him. That's the only thing after all that 'll wash, ain't it?
T. Hughes, Tom Brown at Rugby, ii. 2.

5. To be eroded, as by a stream, by rainfall, etc.

What kind of grass is best on a hill that washes?
Sci. Amer., N. S., LVII. 203.

6. To use washes or cosmetics.

Young Ladies who notoriously Wash and Paint, though they have naturally good Complexions.
Etherege, Man of Mode, ii. 1.

7. To make a swish, swash, or swirl of the water: as. the shad are washing. See shad-wash.

★wash (wosh), n. [< wash, v.] 1. The act or operation of cleansing by the application of water; a cleansing with water or other liquid: as, to give one's face a wash.

Though she may have done a hard day's wash, there's not a child ill within the street but Alice goes to offer to sit up. Mrs. Gaskell, Mary Barton, l.

A tub and a clothes-horse at the other end of the kitchen indicated an intermittent wash of small things also going on. George Eliot, Middlemarch, iii. 24.

2. Articles in the course of being cleansed by washing, or the quantity of clothes or other articles washed on one occasion.

Military washes flapped and fluttered on the fences.
L. M. Alcott, Hospital Sketches, etc., p. 23.

3. The flow or sweep of a body of water; the onward rush of water as its billows break upon the shore; the dash or break of waves upon a shore.

Katie walks
By the long wash of Australasian seas.
Tennyson, The Brook.

4. The rough or broken water left behind by a vessel as it moves along: as, the wash of the steamer nearly filled the boat; also, in aëronautics, the eddying air-currents left in the wake of a flying-machine.—5. The licking or lapping noise made by rippling water as it comes in contact with a boat, a pier, the strand, or the like; the swish-swash of water disturbed as by wind or by ebb or flow.—

6. A piece of ground washed by the action of the sea or river, or sometimes overflowed and sometimes left dry; a shallow part of a river or arm of the sea; also, a morass or marsh; a bog; a fen; a quagmire.

Half my power this night,
Passing these flats, are taken by the tide;
These Lincoln Washes have devoured them.
Shak., K. John, v. 6. 41.

7. Substances collected and deposited by the action of water, such as alluvium.

The wash of pastures, fields, commons, and roads, where rainwater hath a long time settled, is of great advantage to all land. Mortimer, Husbandry.

The debris-piles which stretch along the lower slopes of the ranges in the Cordilleran Region are locally known as washes. J. D. Whitney, Names and Places, p. 125.

8. Waste liquor containing the refuse of food, collected from the cleansed dishes, etc., of a kitchen, such as is often given to pigs; swill or swillings.

The wretched, bloody, and usurping boar . . .
Swills your warm blood like wash.
Shak., Rich. III., v. 2. 9.

Wrinkles like troughs, where swine-deformity swills
The tears of perjury, that lie there like wash
Fallen from the slimy and dishonest eye.
Middleton and Rowley, Changeling, ii. 1.

9. In distilling: (a) The fermented wort, from which the spirit is extracted. The grain ground and infused is called the mash, the decanted liquor is called the wort, and the wort when fermented becomes the wash. (b) A mixture of dunder, molasses, scummings, and water, used in the West Indies for distillation. Bryan Edwards.—10. A liquid used for application to a surface or a body to cleanse it, color it, or the like—especially a thin and watery liquid, as distinguished from one that is glutinous or oily. Specifically—(a) A liquid used for toilet purposes, such as a cosmetic, a liquid dentifrice, or a hair-wash.

My eyes are none of the best since I have used the last new wash of mercury-water.
Wycherley, Love in a Wood, iv. 2.

It [modesty] renders the face delightfully handsome; is not subject to be rubbed off, and cannot be paralleled by either wash, powder, cosmetic, etc.
Addison, Spectator, No. 547.

(b) In med., a lotion. (c) A thin even coating of color spread over a surface, as of a painting. See def. 11.

There is no handsomeness
But has a wash of pride and luxury.
Fletcher (and another?), Nice Valour, iii. 3.

By this is seene who lives by faith and certain knowledge, and who by credulity and the prevailing opinion of the age; whose vertue is an unchangeable graine, and whose of a slight wash. Milton, Church-Government, i. 7.

(d) In zoöl., a light or slight surface-coloration, as if laid over a ground-color; a superficial tone or tinge: as, a frosty wash over black. (e) A thin coat of metal applied to anything for beauty or preservation.

11. In water-color painting, the application of a pigment so mixed as to be in a very fluid condition, or a coat so applied. It is usually a very thin and transparent coat, applied quickly with a large brush, flat and often gradated so as to be darker at one edge than at the opposite edge, or to shade off without mark of separation from one tint into another.

12. The blade of an oar.—13. A measure of shell-fish; a stamped measure capable of holding 21 quarts and a pint of water.

"I buy my winks," said one, "at Billingsgate, at 3*s.* and 4*s.* the wash." A wash is about a bushel.
Mayhew, London Labour and London Poor, I. 78.

Each smack takes about 40 wash of whelks with her for the voyage. Encyc. Brit., IX. 256.

14. A fictitious kind of sale, disallowed on the stock and other exchanges, in which a broker who has received orders from one person to buy and from another person to sell a particular amount or quantity of some particular stock or commodity simply transfers the stock or commodity from one principal to the other and pockets the difference, instead of executing both orders separately to the best advantage in each case, as is required by the rules of the different exchanges. [Stock-exchange slang.]—Black wash. See black-wash.—Eye-wash, collyrium.—Rain-wash. (a) A washing along or away by the force of rain; displacement effected by rainfall.

He was sceptical as to the lacustrine origin of these breccias. Why not subaerial, like those in the interior of Asia?—subangular masses, transported by rainwash to a distance of 10 or 12 miles.
W. L. Blanford, Quart. Jour. Geol. Soc., XLV. 38.

(b) That which is moved by the force of rain; a deposit formed by rain.

Portions of the drift and of the overlying head or rain-wash. Quart. Jour. Geol. Soc., XLIV. 116.

Red wash. (a) A lotion composed of corrosive sublimate, red sulphid of mercury, and creosote, in water. (b) Bates's camphorated water, made by adding copper sulphate, Armenian bole, and camphor to boiling water, and then straining.—Tooth-wash, a liquid dentifrice.—White wash, Goulard's lotion; lead-water.—Yellow wash, a lotion prepared by dissolving 30 grains of corrosive sublimate in one pint of lime-water.

wash† (wosh), a. [< wash, v. (cf. washy); perhaps < warsh* for wearish.] Washy; weak; easily losing its qualities.

Faith, 'tis but a wash scent.
Marston, What you Will, i. 1.

Their bodies of so weak and wash a temper.
Fletcher, Bonduca, iv. 1.

'Tis a wash knave; he will not keep his flesh well.
Fletcher, Rule a Wife, iii. 1.

washable (wosh'ạ-bl), a. [< wash + -able.] Resisting or enduring washing: noting the fabric, and also the color.

Like washable beaver hats that improve with rain, his nerves were rendered stouter and more vigorous by showers of tears. Dickens, Oliver Twist, xxxvii.

wash-back (wosh'bak), n. In distilling, a cistern or vat in which the wort is fermented to form the wash. E. H. Knight.

wash-ball (wosh'bâl), n. A ball of soap sometimes combined with cosmetics.

We furnish'd ourselves with wash-balls, the best being made here, and being a considerable commodity.
Evelyn, Diary, May 21, 1645.

wash-basin (wosh'bā″sn), n. A large basin or bowl in which to wash the hands and face.

wash-basket (wosh'bȧs″ket), n. A circular shallow basket holding about a peck, with a bail handle, used in oystering. [Rhode Island.]

wash-bear (wosh'bâr), n. [= G. waschbär.] The racoon or washing-bear. See cut under racoon.

wash-beetle (wosh'bē″tl), n. A pounder used to beat or pound clothes in the process of washing. E. H. Knight.

wash-board (wosh'bōrd), n. 1. A board or wooden frame having a ribbed or corrugated surface of sheet-metal, vulcanite, earthenware, or wood, used as a scrubber in washing clothing by hand.—2. Naut., a broad thin plank sometimes fixed on the top of the gunwale of a boat or other small vessel's side, to prevent the sea from breaking over; also, a piece of plank on the sill of a lower deck port, for the same purpose. Also called waste-board.—3. A board carried around the walls of a room at the bottom. Also called mopboard, skirting-board.

To stand looking out of the study-window at the rain, and kicking his foot against the wash-board in solitude.
George Eliot, Mill on the Floss, ii. 3.

wash-boiler (wosh'boi″lėr), n. A vessel of sheet-metal in which clothes to be washed are boiled.

wash-bottle (wosh'bot″l), n. 1. In chem., a flask provided with a stopper and tubes so arranged that by blowing with the mouth the water or other liquid in the flask may be forced out in a small stream for washing chemical preparations and utensils.—2. A bottle partly filled with water or other washing fluid through which gases are passed to purify them.

wash-bowl (wosh'bōl), n. 1. A large bowl or basin used for washing the hands, face, etc.

Emerson alone took no part in this "storm in a wash-bowl." Quarterly Rev., CXLV. 132.

2†. A wash-tub.

Education is not form'd upon Sounds and Syllables, but upon Circumstances and Quality. So that, if he was resolv'd to have shown her thus unpolish'd, he should have made her keep Sheep, or brought her up at the Wash-Boul. Jeremy Collier, Short View (ed. 1698), p. 222.

wash-brew (wosh'brö), n. The dish usually known as flummery or (as in Scotland) sowens. [Prov. Eng.]

wash-cloth (wosh'klôth), n. A small piece of cloth used in washing, as in washing dishes or the person.

wash-day (wosh'dā), n. The day set apart in a household for clothes-washing.

washdish (wosh'dish), n. The dish-washer or wagtail. Also molly or polly washdish. See cut under wagtail. [Local, Eng.]

wash-drawing (wosh'drâ″ing), n. See drawing.

washed (wosht), a. 1. That has been subjected to washing, in any sense.—2. Of the nature of a "wash": applied on the exchanges to a mere transfer by a broker of the stock or commodity which one principal had instructed him to sell to another customer who had given instructions to purchase a similar quantity of the same stock or commodity. [Stock-exchange slang.]

Washed or fictitious sales are positively forbidden, and will render the parties concerned liable to suspension or expulsion from the Produce Exchange.
New York Produce Exchange Report, 1888-9, p. 265.

3. In zoöl., overlaid, as a surface or a ground-color, with a wash or light tint or color: as, a fox's black pelt washed with silver. See wash, n., 10 (d).—Washed brick. See *brick*2.

washen†. An obsolete past participle of wash. ★Chaucer.

washer (wosh'ėr), n. [< wash + *-er*1.] 1. One who or that which washes: as, a washer of clothes; a dish-washer; a wool-washer.—2. An annular piece of leather, rubber, metal, or other material placed at a joint in a water-pipe or faucet to make the joint tight and prevent leakage, or over a bolt, or a similar piece upon which a nut may be screwed. Washers serve as cushions or packing between many parts of machines, rails, vehicles, and iron structures. When used in buildings at the ends of tie-rods, they are often of large size and diverse shapes, and are called specifically wall-washers. Some forms are used as locks, to prevent a nut from shaking loose, as in a railroad fish-plate. Such washers are made in the shape of a spring, to allow a certain amount of vibration without disturbing the nut. See lock-nut, and cuts under bolt, packing, and plug-cock.

3. A similar article forming an ornament, as at the socket or pin that holds any adjustable utensil: as, the mother-of-pearl washers of a fan. Compare rosette.—4. In paper-manuf., a straining-and-washing machine used in the process of cleaning rags, to bring them to a pulpy condition; a beating-engine.—5. In plumbing, the outlet of a cistern. It includes the pipe, the joint or union, and the plug, as for a basin.—6. A washing-machine: as, a clothes-washer, window-washer, gold-washer.—7. In coal-mining (short for coal-washer), any machine for washing coal. In the Pennsylvania anthracite region the coal is sometimes washed by jets of water, and separated from the slate, pyrites, and other refuse by jigging. The number of machines which have been invented in different countries for washing coal is very great, but most of them are based on some form or modification of the jig of the metal-miner.

8. The wagtail, a bird. Also dish-washer, peggy dish-washer, moll-washer, molly or polly washdish, washtail, nanny washtail, etc. See cut under wagtail.—9. The wash-bear.—Beveled washer. See beveled.

washer (wosh'ėr), v. t. [< washer, n.] To fit with washers.

I had worked myself up, as I always do, in the manner of heavy men; growing hot like an ill-washered wheel revolving, though I start with a cool axle.
R. D. Blackmore, Lorna Doone, lxx.

He washered the knobs of the doors that had a rattling play whenever handled. Sci. Amer., N. S., LV. 160.

washer-cutter (wosh'ėr-kut″ėr), n. A rotating cutting-tool with two adjustable cutters, worked by a hand-brace or by a drill, and used for cutting out annular disks for washers. E. H. Knight.

washer-gage (wosh'ėr-gāj), n. A graduated tapering rule used for measuring the diameter of bolts, nuts, and washers, and of holes, etc., to receive them.

washer-hoop (wosh'ėr-höp), n. In a water-wheel, a gasket placed between the flange and the curb. E. H. Knight.

washerman (wosh'ėr-man), n.; pl. washermen (-men). A man who washes clothes, etc.—Washermen's itch. Same as dhobies' itch (which see, under dhobie).

washerwoman (wosh'ėr-wụm″an), n.; pl. washerwomen (-wim″en). 1. A woman who washes clothes for others or for hire.—2. The dish-washer or washdish, a wagtail. See cut under wagtail.—Washerwomen's itch or scall, a variety of psoriasis occurring on the hands of washerwomen.

wash-gilding (wosh'gil″ding), n. Gilding by means of an amalgam of gold from which the mercury is afterward driven off by heat. Also called mercurial gilding, and water-gilding, in allusion to the semi-liquid character of the amalgam.

wash-gravel (wosh'grav″el), n. Same as wash-dirt.

wash-hand stand (wosh'hand stand), n. Same as wash-stand.

He . . . locked the door, piled a washhand-stand, chest of drawers, and table against it.
Dickens, Pickwick, xxxvi.

wash-house (wosh'hous), n. [ME. waschhous*, < AS. wæsc-hus, < wascan, wash, + hūs, house; as wash + *house*1.] A house, generally fitted with boilers, tubs, etc., for washing clothes, etc.; a washing-house.

washiness (wosh'i-nes), n. The state of being washy, watery, or worthless; want of strength.

washing (wosh'ing), n. [< ME. wasshinge, waschynge, wessinge, waschunge, < AS. wæscing, washing, verbal n. of wascan, wash: see wash, v.] 1. The act of cleansing with water; ablution. Ceremonial washing has been practised in ancient and modern times and among various peoples. The principal ceremonial washings in the modern Christian church are two: washing of feet, in commemoration of the washing of the feet of the disciples by Christ (see foot); and washing of the hands, especially in connection with the celebration of the eucharist. In the Western Church, as well as in the Greek and other Oriental churches, the priest washes his hands before celebration. In the Western Church he also washes his fingers after the offertory and at the end of the eucharistic office. See ablution, lavabo, purification, and holy water (under water).

John wondered why the Messias, the Lamb of God, pure and without spot, who needed not the abstersions of repentance, or the washings of baptism, should demand it. Jer. Taylor, Works (ed. 1835), I. 95.

2. Clothes washed, especially those washed at one time; a wash.—3. The result of washing; that which is washed from something else, as gold dust.—To give one's head for washing†, to submit to insult.

So am I, and forty more good fellows, that will not give their heads for the washing, I take it.
Beau. and Fl., Cupid's Revenge, iv. 3.

washing-bear (wosh'ing-bâr), n. The wash-bear or racoon, Procyon lotor: so called from its habit of putting its food into water before eating it, as if to wash it. See lotor, and cut under racoon.

washing-crystals (wosh'ing-kris″talz), n. pl. See sodium carbonate, under sodium.

washing-drum (wosh'ing-drum), n. In mining, same as washing-trommel.

washing-engine (wosh'ing-en″jin), n. In paper-manuf., the first of the series of rag-cutting and -cleaning machines used to reduce rags to pulp. It cleans the rags and cuts them to the size known as half-stuff, which is passed on to the beating-engine. See rag-engine. E. H. Knight.

washing-gourd (wosh'ing-gōrd), n. Same as sponge-gourd.

washing-house (wosh'ing-hous), n. A wash-house.

washing-machine (wosh'ing-ma-shēn″), n. An apparatus, operated by hand or steam-power, for washing clothing, fabrics, wool, ore, dishes, or other things. Washing-machines for domestic and laundry use have been made in the form of churns, rubbing- or beating-machines, and tumbling-boxes. While a great variety of machines have been introduced, all depend essentially upon some mechanical device for stirring and beating the clothes in a vessel containing hot soapy water. Rubbing the clothes against a ribbed surface under water appears to be the most common method. For bleacheries and mills where large quantities of fabrics are to be washed, the material is made up into continuous bands, and is drawn through vats over rollers. In some machines beaters are used to assist in cleaning the fabrics. Such machines are of the nature of bucking-machines, keirs, wincing-machines, and dash-wheels. Laundry machines, called 'washers,' are fitted with steam, hot and cold water connections, and, when used for disinfecting, are steam-jacketed and the fabrics are washed under a vacuum to destroy and remove germs.

washing-powder (wosh'ing-pou″dėr), n. A powdered preparation (as of soda-ash and Scotch soda) used in washing clothes.

washing-rollers (wosh'ing-rō″lėrz), n. pl. Rollers for squeezing goods or yarn after scouring. They are of cast-iron, turned true and smooth. The requisite pressure is applied by means of compound levers or movable weights. E. H. Knight.

washing-shield (wosh'ing-shēld), n. In washing, a ridged or corrugated shield for the palm of the hand, or a shield at once to protect the person and supply a surface on which to rub the clothes. E. H. Knight.

Washington canvasback. Same as redhead, 2.

Washington cedar. 1. See cedar, 2, and cut under Sequoia.—2. Thuja plicata. See Thuya.

Washingtonia (wosh-ing-tō'ni-ạ), n. [NL., named after George Washington.] 1. See Osmorrhiza.—2. The name given by Wendland in 1879 to Neowashingtonia, a genus of palms. It is characterized by bisexual flowers with slightly imbricated segments, and a three-lobed ovary with elongated filiform style. The albumen of the seed is uniform, like that of the related genera Corypha and Sabal, but the embryo, unlike the others, is sub-basilar. The best-known species, Neowashingtonia filamentosa, is a native of southern California and the adjacent border, and is called desert-palm, and locally fan-palm and San Diego palm. It produces a tall robust cylindrical trunk, enlarged at the base, often 40, sometimes 75, feet high, crowned by a cluster of light-green circular plicate leaves with from 40 to 60 folds about 4 feet across, cleft nearly to the middle into induplicate segments fringed with fine white pendulous threads often a foot long. The stout leafstalk ends in a large appressed ligule, is about 8 feet long, and is set with strong, hooked spines along its edges. The mature tree bears in June three or four smooth elongated paniculate spadices with very many slender flexuous branchlets. The small dry flowers are white, sessile, and persistent without change, the corona salver-shaped with a fleshy tube and sharp lanceolate lobes, and the six projecting stamens have large filaments and anthers. A single spadix 8 feet long hangs pendent at ripening, in September or October, bearing about ten pounds of small black ellipsoidal one-celled fruits, each with a single shining brown bony seed surrounded by a thin sweetish pulpy pericarp. This is the only arborescent palm in the United States far from the sea; it occurs there chiefly in the desert in San Diego county, California; in Lower California it approaches the coast. It was discovered by Dr. C. C. Parry, 1849–50; it is now frequent in cultivation, especially along the Californian coast, often under the name of Pritchardia filamentosa or Brahea filifera; when very young, it is valued in America as a house-plant. Since 1875 it has been grown by thousands along the Mediterranean near Nice for outdoor decoration, where the characteristic appearance after twelve years' growth is that of a huge bulbous trunk, often 10 feet in girth and 10 feet high, bearing a crown of foliage 20 feet across, composed of from 50 to 80 white-fringed leaves. It varies greatly in habit with age. It has been known to blossom at twenty-two years; one fifty years old was 58 feet high and 11 feet in girth. At maturity, its older leaves turn down, and cover the trunk with a dry thatch, a protection from the desert heat and winds, but burning so readily that it forms a source of danger from fire. Neowashingtonia robusta of cultivation is peculiar in its reddish petiole-bases, and there is a third species, N. Sonoræ (Washingtonia Sonoræ of Watson), of Mexico, with crimson-brown petioles and stem.

Washingtonian (wosh-ing-tō′ni-an), a. and n. [< Washington (see def.) + -ian.] I. a. Pertaining or relating to George Washington (1732–1799), first President of the United States, or to Washington, the capital of the United States, or to Washington, one of the United States, named after him.

II. n. An inhabitant of Washington, the capital of the United States, or of Washington, one of the United States.

washingtonite (wosh′ing-ton-īt), n. [< Washington (see def.) + *-ite*2.] A variety of ilmenite found near Washington in Litchfield county, Connecticut.

Washington lily, thorn. See lily, 1, and *thorn*1 (with cut).

washing-trommel (wosh′ing-trom″el), n. A trommel used for washing ores. A washing-trommel consists usually of a cylinder of sheet-iron from 5 to 10 feet long, which turns on its axis, and through which a copious stream of water flows, the stuff as it passes out being caught on one or more perforated sheet-iron screens, by which the clayey particles are separated from the ore, and this latter sometimes roughly sorted. The form and arrangement of washing-trommels vary considerably according to the character of the ore and of the impurities with which it is mixed. See trommel. Also washing-drum.

washing-up (wosh′ing-up′), n. In mining, same as clean-up, 2. Also washing-off (Australia).

washing-vessel (wosh′ing-ves″el), n. [< ME. waschynge vessel; < washing + vessel.] A vessel to wash in. Prompt. Parv., p. 517.

wash-leather (wosh′leᵀᴴ″ėr), n. A fine white or light-yellow, very soft, and flexible leather, originally made from the skins of Rupicapra tragus, the Alpine chamois. Leather very closely resembling it in all its properties is now made from skins of sheep, goats, deer, calves, and from split hides, the coarser qualities being known as wash-leather. The skins are limed to remove the hair, steeped in a weak solution of lactic or acetic acid to neutralize the lime, and then frizzed or rubbed with pumice-stone or a blunt knife to remove the grain. Repeated fulling by pounding or rolling in oil, washing with weak alkaline solution to remove the oil, stretching, drying, and smoothing complete the process of manufacture.

The greengrocer put on a pair of wash-leather gloves to hand the plates with. Dickens, Pickwick, xxxvii.

washman (wosh′man), n.; pl. washmen (-men). 1. A washerman.—2†. A beggarman covered with simulated sores. [Old cant.]

A Washman is called a Palliard, but not of the right making. He vseth to lye in the hye way with lame or sore legs or armes to beg. These men ye right Palliards wil often times spoile, but they dare not complayn. They be bitten with Spickworts, and somtime with rats bane. Fraternitie of Vagabonds (1561), quoted in Ribton-[Turner's Vagrants and Vagrancy, p. 594.

Washoe process. See *pan*1, 3.

wash-off (wosh′ôf), a. [< wash off: see under wash, v.] In calico-printing, fugitive; that will not stand washing: applied to certain colors or dyes. [Colloq.]

★washout (wosh′out), n. [< wash out: see under wash, v.] The excavation, by erosive action of water, of a part of a road-bed, the bank of a stream, a hillside, or the like; also, the hole or break resulting from such excavation.

The rains and torrents cutting away the land into channels, which at first are merely wash-outs, and at last grow into deep canyons. T. Roosevelt, Hunting Trips, p. 153.

wash-pot (wosh′pot), n. 1. A vessel prepared for the washing of anything. Ps. lx. 8.—2. In tin-plate manuf., a pot kept filled with clean bright melted tin, in which each sheet of iron, after it has left the tin-pot and had the superfluous metal removed from it with a hempen brush, receives its final coating of tin. From the wash-pot the sheet passes to the "patent-pot," and from this to the steel rollers by which the coating of tin is made smooth and uniform. This is the modern method of manufacture, now almost universally followed in Wales.

wash-rag (wosh′rag), n. A small piece of cloth used in washing the person.

She employed the interval while her guests were at their luncheon in plying the wash-rag and comb, to such good effect that Cinderella suffered no greater transformation at the hands of the fairy godmother. E. L. Bynner, Begum's Daughter, iv.

wash-stand (wosh′stand), n. A piece of furniture like a table, with or without a lower shelf, drawers, and a back, arranged to hold a basin and ewer and other appurtenances for washing the person. Since the introduction of elaborate plumbing, the name is given also to the set or fixed wash-bowl, with a marble slab above, and wooden inclosure or support of the basin and pipes, with the faucets, and other conveniences.

I returned, sought the sponge on the washstand, the salts in my drawer, and once more retraced my steps. Charlotte Brontë, Jane Eyre, xx.

wash-stuff (wosh′ stuf), n. In gold-mining, same as wash-dirt.

washtail (wosh′tāl), n. Same as washer, 8. [Local, Eng.]

wash-tub (wosh′tub), n. A tub for washing, especially one in which clothes are washed.

The vulgar words wash-tub, shoe-horn, brew-house, cook-stove, . . . which are merely slovenly and uncouth abbreviations of washing-tub, shoeing-horn, brewing-house, and cooking-stove. R. G. White, Words and their Uses, p. 232.

washy (wosh′i), a. [< wash + *-y*1.] 1. Watery; damp; moist; soft: as, "the washy ooze," Milton, P. L., vii. 303.—2. Too much diluted; weak; thin: as, washy tea.

Meats of a washy and fluid nature, that slip through the stomach and tarry not for concoction, do no more feed a man's health than almost if he lived on air. Rev. T. Adams, Works, I. 432.

Hence—3. Wanting in solidity, substantialness, strength, stamina, or the like; feeble; worthless.

Alas! our women are but washy toys. Dryden, Epil. to the King and Queen (1682).

wastry, wastery (wās'tri, wās'tėr-i), a. Wasteful; improvident. [Obsolete or provincial.]

The pope and his wastrye workers . . . were no fathers, but cruel robbers and destroyers.
Bp. Bale, Select Works (Parker Soc.), p. 138.

wasty (wās'ti), a. [< *waste*1 + *-y*1.] Resembling cotton-waste.

The wool becomes impoverished on account of the heat and dust, and is very tender, with a dry, wasty top.
U. S. Cons. Rep., No. lxii. (1886), p. 470.

wat[1] (wot), v. t. An obsolete or dialectal form of wot. See wit[1].

wat[2] (wät), a. [A Scotch form of wet[1].] 1. Wet.—2. Addicted to drinking; droughty.

wat[3] (wot), n. [Early mod. E. watte; a corruption of Walt, abbr. of Walter. Cf. Watt and Watts, as surnames.] An old familiar name for a hare.

I wold my master were a watt
& my boke a wyld Catt,
& a brase of grehowndis in his toppe.
I wold be glade for to se that!
Babees Book (E. E. T. S.), p. 404.

Thus, once concluded, out the teazers run,
And in full cry and speed, till Wat's undone.
R. Fletcher's Epigrams, p. 139. (Nares.)

And when thou hast on foot the purblind hare,
Mark the poor wretch. . . .
By this, poor Wat, far off upon a hill,
Stands on his hinder legs with listening ear.
Shak., Venus and Adonis, l. 697.

wat[6] (wot), adv. [Origin obscure; prob. for what.] Certainly; indeed. [Prov. Eng.]

watap, watapeh (wot′ap, wot′ä-pe), n. [Ojibwa watab.] The long slender roots of the white spruce, Picea alba, which are used by canoe-makers in the Great Lake region for binding together the strips of birch-bark.

★watch (woch), n. [< ME. wacche, wecche, < AS. wæcce, watch, watching, < wacan, wake: see wake[1].] 1†. The state of being awake; wakefulness.

To lie in watch there and to think on him.
Shak., Cymbeline, iii. 4. 43.

2. A keeping awake for the purpose of attending, guarding, or preserving; attendance without sleep; preservative or preventive vigilance; vigil.

Travellers always lie in the boat, and keep a watch to defend themselves against any attack.
Pococke, Description of the East, I. 70.

We were told to keep good watch here all night, that there were troops of robbers on the east-side of the water who had lately plundered some boats.
Bruce, Source of the Nile, I. 84.

3. A wake. See wake[1], n., 2.

Oon cresset . . . to be born biforn the Baillies of the seid cite [Worcester], in the Vigille of the natiuite of Seynt John Baptiste, at the comyn Wacche of the seid cite; and the wardeyns of the seid crafte, and alle the hole crafte, shallen wayte vppon the seid Baillies in the seid Vigille, at the seid Wacche, in ther best arraye harnesid.
English Gilds (E. E. T. S.), p. 408.

4. Close, constant observation; vigilant attention; careful, continued notice; supervision; vigilance; outlook: as, to be on the watch.

When I had lost one shaft,
I shot his fellow of the self-same flight
The self-same way with more advised watch,
To find the other forth. Shak., M. of V., i. 1. 142.

There [the trout] lies at the watch for any fly or minnow that comes near to him.
I. Walton, Complete Angler, p. 75.

Nor could she otherwise account for the judge's quiescent mood than by supposing him craftily on the watch, while Clifford developed these symptoms of a distracted mind. Hawthorne, Seven Gables, xvi.

5. A person, or number of persons, whose duty it is to watch over the persons, property, or interests of others; a watchman, or body of watchmen; a sentinel; a sentry; guard.

Such, they say, as stand in narrow lanes,
And beat our watch, and rob our passengers.
Shak., Rich. II., v. 3. 8.

Home in a coach, round by the Wall, where we met so many stops by the Watches that it cost us much time and some trouble, and more money, to every Watch, to them to drink. Pepys, Diary, III. 410.

6. The period of time during which one person or body of persons watch or stand sentinel, or the time from one relief of sentinels to another; hence, a division of the night, when the precautionary setting of a watch is most generally necessary; period of time; hour. The Jews, like the Greeks and Romans, divided the night into military watches instead of hours, each watch representing the period for which each separate body of sentinels remained on duty. The proper Jewish reckoning recognized only three such watches: the first (lasting from sunset till about 10 P. M.), the second or middle watch (10 P. M. to 2 A. M.), and the third, or morning watch (from 2 A. M. till sunrise). After the establishment of the Roman power they were increased to four, which were named as first, second, etc., or by the terms even, midnight, cock-crowing, and morning, these terminating respectively at 9 P. M., midnight, 3 A. M., and 6 A. M.

7. Naut.: (a) The period of time occupied by each part of a ship's crew alternately while on duty. The period of time called a watch is four hours, the reckoning beginning at noon or midnight. Between 4 and 8 P. M. the time is divided into two short watches, or dog-watches, in order to prevent the constant recurrence of duty to the same portion of the crew during the same hours. Thus, the period from 12 to 4 P. M. is called the afternoon watch, from 4 to 6 the first dog-watch, from 6 to 8 the second dog-watch, from 8 to 12 the first night watch, from midnight to 4 A. M. the middle watch, from 4 to 8 the morning watch, and from 8 to 12 noon the forenoon watch. When this alternation of watches is kept up during the 24 hours, it is termed having watch and watch, in distinction from keeping all hands at work during one or more watches.

After 2. or 3. watches more we were in 24. fadoms.
Quoted in Capt. John Smith's Works, I. 112.

(b) A certain part of the officers and crew of a vessel who together attend to working her for an allotted time. The crew of every vessel while at sea is generally divided into two parts: the starboard watch, which in the merchant service is the captain's watch, and is often commanded by the second mate; and the port or larboard watch, which in the merchant service is commanded by the chief mate. In the British and United States navies these watches are commanded by the lieutenants successively. The anchor-watch is a small watch composed of a few men appointed to look after the ship while at anchor or in port.

8. Anything by which the progress of time is perceived and measured. (a†) A candle marked out into sections, each of which required a certain time to burn.

Fill me a bowl of wine. Give me a watch.
Shak., Rich. III., v. 3. 63.

(b) A small portable timepiece or timekeeper that may be worn on the person, operated by power stored in a coiled spring, and capable of keeping time when held in any position. Watches were invented at Nüremberg about the beginning of the sixteenth century, and for a long time the wearing of a watch was considered in some degree a mark or proof of gentility. Thus Malvolio remarks in anticipation of his great fortune:

I frown the while; and perchance wind up my watch, or play with my—some rich jewel. Shak., T. N., ii. 5. 66.

The new contrivance of applying precious stones to watches I had the good fortune to see when Mr. Facio, the inventor, and an ingenious man, and Mr. Debaufre, the workman, presented their watches, to have the approbation of the Royal Society.
W. Derham (Ellis's Lit. Letters, p. 173).

A friend of mine had a watch given him when he was a boy, a "bull's eye," with a loose silver case that came off like an oyster-shell from its contents; you know them—the cases that you hang on your thumb, while the core, or the real watch, lies in your hand as naked as a peeled apple. O. W. Holmes, Professor, ii.

9. pl. A name of the trumpetleaf, Sarracenia flava, probably alluding to the resemblance of the flowers to watches.—10. In pottery, a trial piece of clay so placed in a kiln that it can be readily withdrawn to enable the workmen to judge by its appearance of the heat of the fire and the condition of the ware remaining in the saggars.—11. In hawking, a company or flight, as of nightingales.—Beat of a watch. See beat[1].—Duplex watch, a watch having two sets of teeth upon the rim of its escapement-wheel.—Officer of the watch. See watch-officer.—Paddy's watch. Same as paddywhack, 3.—Parish watch. See parish.—The Black Watch, a semi-military organization in Edinburgh, Scotland, in the early part of the eighteenth century. From this a regiment of the British army was afterward formed, and the name was ultimately given to the 42d and 73d regiments, which are now the 1st and 2d Battalions of the Black Watch or Royal Highlanders.—To muster the watch. See muster.—To stand a watch. See stand.—Watch and ward, the old custom of watching by night and by day in towns and cities. English writers up to the seventeenth century recognize a distinction between watch and ward, the former being used to signify a watching and guarding by night, and the latter a watching, guarding, and protecting by day. Hence, when the terms were used in combination, especially in the phrase to keep watch and ward, they implied a continuous and uninterrupted watching and guarding, constant vigilance and protection by night and by day.

It ys the Strongest towne of walls, towers, Bulwerks, waches and wardes that ever I saw in all my lyff.
Torkington, Diarie of Eng. Travell, p. 16.

I sawe at the towne of Braxima al the artillerie brought together to ye gates of your house; I saw watch and warde kept round about your lodging.
Guevara, Letters (tr. by Hellowes, 1577), p. 246.

★watch (woch), v. [< ME. wacchen, wecchen, < AS. wæccan, watch, wake: see wake[1], v., and cf. watch, n.] I. intrans. 1. To be awake; be or continue without sleep; keep vigil.

But if necessitie compell you to watch longer then ordinary, then be sure to augment your sleepe the next morning. Babees Book (E. E. T. S.), p. 252.

As soon as I am dead,
Come all and watch one night about my hearse.
Beau. and Fl., Maid's Tragedy, ii. 1.

2. To be attentive, circumspect, or vigilant; be closely observant; notice carefully; give heed.

Watch and pray, that ye enter not into temptation.
Mat. xxvi. 41.

Rooks, watching doubtfully as you pass in the distance, rise into the air if you stop.
H. Spencer, Prin. of Sociol., § 62.

3. To act as a watchman, guard, sentinel, or the like; keep watch.

The lieutenant to-night watches on the court of guard.
Shak., Othello, iii. 1. 219.

4. To look forward with expectation; be expectant; seek opportunity; wait.—5. To act as attendant or nurse on the sick by night; remain awake to give attendance, assistance, or the like: as, to watch with a patient in a fever.—6. To float on the surface of the water: said of a buoy.—To watch over, to be cautiously observant of; inspect; superintend and guard from error and danger; keep guard over.

Watch over thyself, counsel thyself, judge thyself impartially. Jer. Taylor.

There is abundant cause to think that every town in which the Lord Jesus Christ is worshipped hath an angel to watch over it. C. Mather, Mag. Chris., Hist. Boston.

II. trans. 1. To look with close attention at or on; keep carefully and constantly in view or supervision; keep a sharp lookout on or for; observe, notice, or regard with vigilance and care; keep an eye upon.

Lie not a night from home; watch me like Argus.
Shak., M. of V., v. 1. 230.

They are singled out, and all opportunities watched against them. Bacon, Political Fables, i., Expl.

When Pitt entered Parliament, the whole political world was attentively watching the progress of an event which soon added great strength to the Opposition.
Macaulay, William Pitt.

2. To have in keeping; tend; guard; take care of.

Flaming ministers to watch and tend Their earthy charge. Milton, P. L., ix. 156.

Lord Brampton. Charges? For what?
Sable. First, Twenty Guineas to my Lady's Woman for notice of your Death (a Fee I've before now known the Widow herself go halfs in), but no matter for that. In the next place, Ten Pounds for watching you all your long Fit of Sickness last Winter. Steele, Grief A-la-Mode, ii. 1.

Paris watch'd the flocks in the groves of Ida. Broome.

3. To look for; wait for.

We will stand and watch your pleasure.
Shak., J. C., iv. 3. 249.

4†. To take or detect by lying in wait; surprise.

Nay, do not fly; I think we have watch'd you now.
Shak., M. W. of W., v. 5. 107.

5. In falconry, to keep awake; keep from sleep, as a hawk, for the purpose of exhausting and taming it.

My lord shall never rest;
I'll watch him tame, and talk him out of patience.
Shak., Othello, iii. 3. 23.

watch-bell† (woch′bel), n. 1. An alarm-bell.

They [Russian travelers] report that the Land of Mugalla reaches from Boghar to the north sea, and hath many Castles built of Stone four-square, with Towers at the Corners cover'd with glazed Tiles; and on the Gates Alarum Bells, or Watch-Bells, twenty pound weight of Metal.
Milton, Hist. Moscovia, iii.

2. The bell which is struck every half-hour on board ship to mark the time. Now called ship's bell.

watch-bill (woch′bil), n. A list of the officers and crew of a ship, as divided into watches, together with the several stations to which the men respectively belong.

watch-birth† (woch′bėrth), n. [< watch, v., + obj. birth.] A midwife. [Rare.]

Th' eternall Watch-births of thy sacred Wit.
Sylvester, tr. of Du Bartas's Weeks, ii., The Magnificence.

watch-box (woch′boks), n. A sentry-box.

watch-candle (woch′kan″dl), n. Same as watching-candle.

Were it not better for a man in a fair room to set up one great light, or branching candlestick of lights, than to go about with a small watch candle into every corner?
Bacon, Advancement of Learning, i. 45.

watchcase (woch′kās), n. 1. The outer case for a watch. Formerly it was often a hinged cover or box fitted closely over the watch proper, and having openings through which the dial appeared and the stem or ring projected. In modern watches this feature is generally absent, and the watchcase is the metal cover, usually of gold or silver, which incloses the works.

We now never see watch-cases made of other materials than the precious metals, or imitations thereof; but then [reign of Queen Anne] beautiful cases were made of shagreen of various colours, or tortoiseshell inlaid or studded with gold.
J. Ashton, Social Life in Reign of Queen Anne, I. 159.

2. Same as watch-pocket.—3†. A sentry-box. [Rare.]

O thou dull god [sleep], why liest thou with the vile
In loathsome beds, and leavest the kingly couch
A watch-case, or a common 'larum-bell?
Shak., 2 Hen. IV., iii. 1. 17.

watchcase-cutter (woch′kās-kut″ėr), n. A machine for cutting hinge-recesses in watch-cases. E. H. Knight.

watch-clock (woch′klok), n. 1†. An alarum.

Powrfull Need (Arts ancient Dame and Keeper,
The early watch-clock of the sloathfull sleeper).
Sylvester, tr. of Du Bartas's Weeks, ii., The Handy-Crafts.

2. A timepiece used as a time-detector or time-reporter for a watchman. It is made in many forms. One kind is a small portable clock that must be carried by the watchman to different stations on his rounds. At each station a special key fastened to a chain must be used to make a mark on a paper dial inside the clock, thus making a record of the performance of his duty. Another form consists of a fixed clock, having a key that must be touched to make the record, a clock being placed at each station. Another and now more common form is a clock placed at a central station, and connected by wires with the place where the watchman makes his rounds; at each station the watchman touches a push-button to close the circuit and print a mark on a dial in the clock.

watch-dog (woch'dog), n. A dog kept to watch or guard premises and property.

'Tis sweet to hear the watch-dog's honest bark Bay deep-mouth'd welcome as we draw near home.
Byron, Don Juan, i. 123.

watcher (woch'ėr), n. One who or that which watches. Specifically—(a) One who sits up and continues awake; one who lies awake.

Get on your nightgown, lest occasion call us,
And show us to be watchers.
Shak., Macbeth, ii. 2. 71.

(b) One who keeps awake for the purpose of guarding or attending upon something or some one; a nurse, watchman, sentry, or the like.

On the fronters . . . were set watchmen and watchers in dyuers manners.
Berners, tr. of Froissart's Chron., II. xlix.

A charr'd and wrinkled piece of womanhood
Sat watching like a watcher by the dead.
Tennyson, Princess, v.

(c) One who observes: as, a watcher of the time.

Then felt I like some watcher of the skies,
When a new planet swims into his ken.
Keats, Sonnets, xi.

(d) A spy; one sent to watch an enemy. Jer. iv. 16.

watchet† (woch'et), n. and a. [Early mod. E. also watched; < ME. wachet, waget, wagett, vachet, < OF. wachet, dim. of wache, a kind of stuff.] A light- or pale-blue color.

Yclad he was ful smal and proprely
Al in a kirtel of a lyght waget.
Chaucer, Miller's Tale, l. 135.

[There are MS. variations vachet, wagett, and wachet, of which the last only is in print.]

Celestro, azure, watchet, or skie-colour. Celeste, heauenlie, celestiall. Also skie-colour or azure and watchet.
Florio.

Their watchet mantles frindgd with silver rownd.
Spenser, F. Q., III. iv. 40.

The greater shippes were towed downe with boates and oares, and the mariners, being all apparelled in watchet or skie coloured clothe, rowed a maine, and made way with diligence.
Hakluyt's Voyages, quoted in R. Eden (First Books on America, ed. Arber, p. xxxviii.).

watchful (woch'fûl), a. [< watch + -ful.] 1†. Wakeful; sleepless.

What watchful cares do interpose themselves
Betwixt your eyes and night? Shak., J. C., ii. 1. 98.

2. Vigilant; careful; wary; cautious; observant; alert; on the watch: with of before the thing to be regulated or observed, and against before the thing to be avoided: as, to be watchful of one's behavior; to be watchful against the growth of vicious habits.

Be watchful, and strengthen the things which remain.
Rev. iii. 2.

Watchful Servants to the Bagnio come,
They're ne'er admitted to the Bathing-room.
Congreve, tr. of Ovid's Art of Love.

=Syn. 2. Watchful, Vigilant, Wakeful, attentive, heedful, circumspect, guarded. Wakeful refers to the lack of disposition to sleep, especially at times when one would ordinarily have such a disposition; watchful and vigilant refer to the mind, will, or conduct: they are of about equal vigor; watchful is the broader in its range of meaning.

watchfully (woch'fûl-i), adv. In a watchful manner; vigilantly; heedfully; with careful observation of the approach of evil, or with attention to duty.

watchfulness (woch'fûl-nes), n. The state or character of being watchful, in any sense.

watch-glass (woch'glȧs), n. 1. A sand-glass used to measure the time of a watch, as on shipboard: usually a half-hour glass.—2. A thin concavo-convex piece of glass used for covering the dial of a watch. Those made in recent times for watches that have not a double case, or hunting-case, are thicker, and have a peculiar flattened curve. Compare crystal, 2 (c).

watch-guard (woch'gärd), n. A chain, ribbon, or cord fastened to a watch, and either passed around the neck or secured to some part of the clothing.

watch-gun (woch'gun), n. A gun fired at the changing of the watch, as in a fortress or garrison, or on board a man-of-war.

watch-header (woch'hed″ėr), n. The officer in charge of a watch.

The divisions of the crew are known as the starboard and larboard watches, commanded respectively by the first and second mates or the second and third mates, who are known as watch-headers.
Fisheries of the U. S., V. ii. 229.

watch-house (woch'hous), n. 1. A house in which a watch or guard is placed.—2. A house where night-watchmen assemble previous to the hour at which they enter upon their respective beats, and where disturbers of the peace seized by them during the night are lodged and kept in custody till morning, when they are brought before a magistrate; a lockup.

At the Golden Ball and 2 Green Posts (There being a Hatch with Iron spikes at the door), near the Watch-House in Lambeth Marsh.
Quoted in Ashton's Social Life in Reign of Queen Anne, [I. 118.

watching (woch'ing), n. [Verbal n. of watch, v.] A keeping awake; a vigil.

In watchings often. 2 Cor. xi. 27.

Watchings of flowers. Same as vigils of flowers (which see, under vigil).

watching-candle (woch'ing-kan″dl), n. The candle used at the watching or waking of a corpse.

Why should I twine my arms to cables, sit up all night like a watching-candle, and distil my brains through my eyelids? Academy of Compliments (1714).

watch-jewel (woch'jö″el), n. A jewel, usually a ruby, in which is drilled a hole for an arbor, used in the works of a watch, to lessen friction and wear.

watch-key (woch'kē), n. A small key with a square tube to fit the winding-arbor of a watch, serving to wind the watch by coiling the mainspring.

watch-light (woch'līt), n. A light kept burning at night, as for the use of a watcher in the sick-room.

There 's a star;
Morello 's gone, the watch-lights show the wall.
Browning, Andrea del Sarto.

watchmaker (woch'mā″kėr), n. One whose occupation is to make and repair watches.—Watchmakers' cramp, a neurosis affecting watchmakers, in which, through irregular muscular action, it becomes impossible to hold in the eye-socket the lens with which they examine their work. Occasionally also the fingers are affected in a manner similar to what is observed in writers' cramp.—Watchmakers' drill. See drill[1].

watchmaking (woch'mā″king), n. The art or operation of making watches; the business or occupation of a watchmaker.

watchman (woch'mạn), n.; pl. watchmen (-men). [< ME. waccheman; < watch + man.] A person set to keep watch; specifically, a sentinel; a guard; one who guards the streets of a city by night; also, one set to keep guard, as over a building in the night, to protect it from fire or thieves.

They went, and made the sepulcre sure with watche men, and sealed the stone.
Tyndale (1526), Mat. xxvii. 66.

Watchman, what of the night? Isa. xxi. 11.

Our watchmen from the towers, with longing eyes, Expect his swift arrival. Dryden, Spanish Friar, i. 1.

Who has not heard the Scowrer's Midnight Fame?
Who has not trembled at the Mohock's Name?
Was there a Watchman took his hourly Rounds Safe from their Blows or new invented Wounds?
Gay, Trivia, iii. 327.

watch-mark (woch'märk), n. A narrow strip of braid around the shoulder seam on the blouse of an enlisted man in the navy. Worn on the right or left arm to indicate that he belongs to the starboard or port watch respectively.

watch-meeting (woch'mē″ting), n. A religious meeting or religious services held on the last night of the year, and terminated on the arrival of the new year. See watch-night.

watchment† (woch'ment), n. [< watch + -ment.] A watching; vigil; observation. [Rare.]

My watchments are now over, by my master's direction.
Richardson, Pamela, I. 171.

watch-night (woch'nīt), n. The last night of the year, on which, in some churches, religious services are held till the advent of the new year.

watch-officer (woch'of″i-sėr), n. The officer in charge of the deck of a ship, who takes his turn with others in standing watches, during which time, subject to the authority of the commanding officer, he has charge of the ship. Also called officer of the watch.

watch-oil (woch'oil), n. A refined, very limpid and fluid lubricating-oil, used in oiling clocks and watches. Olive- or almond-oil after clarifying is much used for this purpose. Also clock-oil.

watch-paper (woch'pā″pėr), n. A small circle of paper, silk, muslin, or other material, inserted in the outer case of an old-fashioned watch, to prevent the metal from defacing the inner case. These papers were frequently cut with elaborate designs, or painted with miniatures or ciphers and devices. Those of textile fabrics were embroidered in silk, or with human hair. Commoner ones were printed with the head of some public character, or with some motto or sentiment.

watch-peel (woch'pēl), n. A watch-tower.

Watch-peels, castles, and towers looked out upon us as we walked. Geikie, Geol. Sketches, I.

watch-pocket (woch'pok″et), n. A small pocket in a garment for carrying a watch on the person; also, a pocket, bag, etc., in or on the head-curtain of a bed for holding the watch at night.

watch-pole (woch'pōl), n. The pole or truncheon carried by a watchman.

I know a gentleman that has several wounds in the head by watch-poles, and has been thrice run through the body to carry on a good jest. Steele, Spectator, No. 358.

watch-rate (woch'rāt), n. A rate authorized to be levied in England for watching and lighting a parish or borough.

watchspring (woch'spring), n. The mainspring of a watch.

watch-stand (woch'stand), n. A contrivance for holding the watch when it is not worn on the person, enabling the dial to be seen. The form is often that of a small clock-case, and the stands of the eighteenth century were frequently very rich, both in material and in workmanship.

watch-tackle (woch'tak″l), n. Naut., a small tackle consisting of a double and single block with a fall. Also called handy-billy.

By hauling every brace and bowline, and clapping watch-tackles upon all the sheets and halyards, we managed to hold our own. R. H. Dana, Jr., Before the Mast, p. 250.

watch-telescope (woch'tel″e-skōp), n. See telescope.

watch-tower (woch'tou″ėr), n. A tower on which a sentinel is placed to watch for enemies, for the approach of danger, etc.

I stand continually upon the watch-tower in the daytime. Isa. xxi. 8.

About a mile from the towne there is a very high and strong watch tower. Coryat, Crudities, I. 10.

watchword (woch'wėrd), n. [< ME. waccheword; < watch + word.] 1. A word or short phrase to be communicated on challenge to the watch or sentinels in a camp; a password or signal by which friends can be known from enemies.

Wacche wordes to wale, that weghis might know.
Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), l. 6056.

Hence—2. Any preconcerted indication or a direction eagerly watched for, as a signal for action.

All have theyr eares upright, wayting when the watchword shall come that they should all rise generally into rebellion. Spenser, State of Ireland.

3. A word used as a motto, as expressive of a principle or rule of action; a maxim, byword, or rallying-cry.

"Now" is the constant syllable ticking from the clock of time. "Now" is the watchword of the wise. "Now" is on the banner of the prudent. Parr.

His watchword is honour, his pay is renown.
Scott, Rokeby, v. 20.

4†. The call of a watchman or sentry as he goes his rounds.

Since when a watchword every minute of the night goeth about the wals to testifie their vigilancy.
Sandys, Travailes, p. 10.

To set a watchword upon†, to make proverbial; turn into a byword.

S. Paule himselfe (who yet for the credite of Poets) alledgeth twise two Poets, . . . setteth a watch-word vpon Philosophy, indeede vpon the abuse. So dooth Plato, vpon the abuse, not vpon Poetrie. Plato found fault that the Poet of his time filled the worlde with wrong opinions of the Gods. Sir P. Sidney, Apol. for Poetrie.

watchwork (woch'wėrk), n. The machinery of a watch: now usually in the plural.

wate†, v. t. A form of wat[1]. See wit[1].

water (wâ'tėr), n. [< ME. water, watre, wæter, ★weter, < AS. wæter = OS. watar = OFries. weter, water = D. water = MLG. water = OHG. wazzar, MHG. wazzer, G. wasser, water, with a formative -r, akin to Icel. vatn = Sw. vatten = Dan. vand = Goth. watō (pl. watnō), in which a different formative -n appears; cf. OBulg. Russ. voda, Lith. wandů, Gr. ὕδωρ (ὑδατ-, ὑδρ-), Skt. udan, water; < Teut. √ wat, Indo-Eur. √ wad, be wet. Cf. wash, perhaps from the same root as water. See wet[1].]

1. A transparent, inodorous, tasteless fluid, H_2O. Water is a powerful refractor of light and an imperfect conductor of heat and electricity; it is very slightly compressible, its absolute diminution for a pressure of one atmosphere being only about one twenty-thousandth of its bulk. Although it is colorless in small quantities, it is blue like the atmosphere when viewed in mass. It assumes a solid form, that of ice or snow, at 32° F. (0° C.); and it takes the form of vapor or steam at 212° F. (100° C.), under a pressure of 29.9 inches (more exactly, 760 millimeters) of mercury, retaining that form at all higher temperatures. Under ordinary conditions, therefore, water possesses the liquid form only at temperatures lying between 32° and 212° F. The specific gravity of water is 1 at 39°.2 F. (4° C.), being the unit to which the specific gravities of all solids and liquids are referred: one cubic foot of water at 62° F. weighs about 1,000 ounces or 62.5 pounds. Water is 770 times heavier than atmospheric air at 32° F. (0° C.) and under a pressure of 760 millimeters. It has its greatest density at 39.2° F. (4° C.), and in this respect it presents a singular exception to the general law of expansion by heat. If water at 39.2° F. is cooled, it expands as it cools till reduced to 32°, when it solidifies; and if water at 39.2° F. is heated, it expands as the temperature increases in accordance with the general law. Considered from a chemical point of view, water is a compound substance, consisting of hydrogen and oxygen, in the proportion of 2 volumes of the former gas to 1 volume of the latter; or by weight it is composed of 2 parts of hydrogen united with 16 parts of oxygen. It exhibits in itself neither acid nor basic properties. Water enters, as a liquid, into a peculiar kind of combination with a great number of different substances. Of all liquids water is the most powerful and general solvent, and on this important property its use depends. Without water the processes of animal and vegetable life would come to a stand. The globe is covered on about $\frac{3}{4}$ of its surface by the ocean water, to an average depth of very nearly 12,500 feet. (See ocean.) This water is, however, far from pure, since it holds in solution nearly 3½ per cent. of its weight of saline matter, about three fourths of which is common salt. The ocean water is not potable, but pure water can be obtained from it by distillation, as is often done at sea—for which purpose, however, fuel and a somewhat cumbrous apparatus are required. Some towns on the South American coast have been supplied with water exclusively in this way, up to the time when works were completed for bringing it from the distant mountains. The chief source of supply for the water which falls upon the earth is the ocean, from whose surface it is raised by the heat of the sun in the form of vapor, ready to be condensed again and fall as rain or snow either on sea or land, in accordance with varying and complicated conditions of climate and topography. The precipitation of rain and snow upon different parts of the earth's surface varies greatly, both in its total amount and in its seasonal distribution. Some regions receive as much as 600 inches in a year; over other extensive areas the rainfall is so small that it is hardly possible to measure it. In some districts the rain is pretty equally distributed through the year; in others it is all, or nearly all, limited to one season, as winter or summer. These climatic conditions are matters of the utmost importance, as regards both the distribution and the welfare of the human race and of animal and vegetable life in general. The habitability and fertility of the earth depend in part on temperature and in part on the amount and character of the precipitation. In general, where there is no rainfall the region is either very sparsely or not at all inhabited, and vegetation is almost entirely wanting; of this character is a considerable part of northern Africa and central Asia: such regions are called deserts. Other regions, where there is some rainfall, but where the amount is small, are destitute of forests but support a more or less abundant growth of grasses. Such regions are, as a rule, thinly inhabited, and the population is pastoral and nomadic; of this character are large areas in central Asia, and in both North and South America. Regions of abundant or even of moderately large precipitation are generally forested, and can be successfully cultivated after the forests have been cut down: these, in general, are the densely inhabited parts of the world. Such are the essential facts and conditions of the distribution of population as connected with rainfall. But to these are many exceptions. Thus, the Nile flows for 2,000 miles through a rainless region, but has a somewhat dense population for a considerable distance along its banks, though only there, the river itself being the sole source of water-supply for the inhabitants of the valley. Some regions of very small rainfall are situated sufficiently near high mountain-ranges on which the precipitation is comparatively large, and from which water can be obtained in considerable quantity with a moderate expenditure of money. In this connection the fact that the precipitation at high altitudes is chiefly in the form of snow is a matter of great importance, as thereby the supply of water is made capable of lasting through, or nearly through, the summer, the snow melting gradually, while the precipitation in the form of rain would be carried away much more rapidly. Rain, if caught at a distance from human habitations and after it has been falling for some time, contains hardly a perceptible trace of foreign matter. Snow falling in the polar regions is also very nearly chemically pure. By distillation, with suitable precautions, water may be obtained which will leave no trace of residue when evaporated in a platinum vessel, and which will also be free from gaseous contents. The water of springs and rivers always contains more or less mineral matter, which it has dissolved out from the soil and rock with which it has been in contact upon the surface or underground. Next to rain-water, the purest natural water is that of mountain-lakes fed from melting snow, and resting on crystalline and impermeable rocks; and rivers in uninhabited regions, running over similar rocks, are also very nearly pure, sometimes leaving not more than two or three grains of foreign matter to the gallon when evaporated to dryness. Rivers, on the other hand, which run over calcareous and soft shaly and clayey rocks always contain a considerable amount of impurities; from fifteen to twenty grains to the gallon is not an uncommon amount under such conditions. Pure water, such as that of mountain-lakes and rivers running over crystalline rocks, is called soft; water containing more than 8 or 10 grains of calcareous matter to the gallon is called hard. The foreign matter in soft water is partly organic and partly mineral; in the latter a little silica is always present, as well as salts of potash, soda, lime, and magnesia. The impurities of hard water are varied in character, but carbonate of lime generally predominates. The mineral impurities of water are not necessarily deleterious to health, even if present in somewhat large quantities. The contamination of water by organic matter (such as sewage, and the like) is a matter of great importance and often of great danger. Dead organic matter is rapidly oxidized by exposure to the air in flowing water, and ceases to be dangerous to health. The living organisms with which water is sometimes contaminated, in receiving the sewage of towns or in other ways, are sometimes the germs of deadly disease, and appear to possess a large amount of vitality, so that they can be conveyed for long distances without becoming disorganized, as is the case with dead organic matter. See water-supply.

> Shak., Rich. III., iv. 4. 512.

(b) Mineral water. See mineral.

> Mineral-Waters, . . . as the Sulphurous Waters at the Bath. Gideon Harvey, Vanities of Philosophy and [Physick (ed. 1702), xvi.

> Then bouses drumly German water,
> To mak' himsel' look fair and fatter.
> Burns, The Twa Dogs.

(c) pl. Waves, as of the sea; surges; a flood.

> Therefore will not we fear, . . . though the mountains be carried into the midst of the sea; though the waters thereof roar and be troubled. Ps. xlvi. 3.

> Our Souls have sight of that immortal sea, . . .
> And see the Children sport upon the shore,
> And hear the mighty waters rolling evermore.
> Wordsworth, Ode, Immortality.

2. A limited body of water, as an ocean, a sea, or a lake; often, in provincial English and Scotch use, a river or lake: as, Derwent Water (lake); Gala Water (stream). In law the right or title to a body of water is regarded as an incident to the right to the land which it covers, and the term land includes a body of water thereon.

> Oliphant, New English, I. 455.

(c) Saliva; spittle.

> For the thought of Peter's oysters brought the water to his mouth. W. S. Gilbert, Etiquette.

(d) Urine.

> Well, I have cast thy water, and I see
> Th' art fall'n to wit's extremest poverty,
> Sure in consumption of the spritely part.
> Marston, Satires, iv. 125.

(e) The aqueous or vitreous humor of the eye; eye-water. (f) The serous effusion of dropsy, in a blister, and the like: as, water on the brain. (g) pl. In obstet., the liquor amnii.

4. A distilled liquor, essence, extract, or the like. See strong water, under strong[1].

> But this water
> Hath a strange virtue in 't, beyond his art;
> It is a sacred relic, part of that > Most powerful juice with which Medea made > Old Æson young. Massinger, Bashful Lover, v. 1.

> His wife afterwards did take me into my closet, and give me a cellar of waters of her own distilling.
> Pepys, Diary, April 1, 1668.

5. In phar., a solution of a volatile oil, or of a volatile substance like ammonia or camphor, in water.—6. Transparency, as of water; the property of a precious stone in which its beauty chiefly consists, involving also its refracting power. In this sense the word is applied especially to diamonds, and is used loosely to express their relative excellence: as, a diamond of the first water: hence used figuratively to note the degree of excellence or fineness of any object of esteem: as, genius of the purest water. See the phrase first water, below.

> An excellent lapidary set these stones, sure;
> Do you mark their waters?
> Fletcher, Rule a Wife, v. 2.

7. The waterside; the shore of a sea, lake, stream, or the like, considered with or apart from its inhabitants; specifically, a watering-place; a seaside resort. [Provincial.]

> Gar warn the water, braid and wide.
> Jamie Telfer (Child's Ballads, VI. 110).

The water, in the mountainous districts of Scotland, is often used to express the banks of the river, which are the only inhabitable parts of the country. To raise the water, therefore, was to alarm those who lived along its side. Quoted in Child's Ballads, VI. 110, note.

The phrase "going to the waters" has been familiar to me for the last forty years as used by the peasantry in the counties of Huntingdon, Rutland, and Lincoln. By it is meant a seaside place, and not an inland watering-place, such as Malvern, Bath, Leamington, or Cheltenham. N. and Q., 7th ser., VII. 378.

8. In finance, additional shares created by watering stock. See water, v. t., 4.

By the much-abused word "property" he referred, of course, to the fictitious capital, or "water," which the gas companies had added to their real capital.
N. A. Rev., CXLIII. 92.

Above water, afloat; hence, figuratively, out of embarrassment or trouble.

> Being ask'd by some that were not ignorant in Sea Affairs how long he thought the Ship might be kept above Water, he said he could promise nothing, but that it could not be done above three Hours.
> N. Bailey, tr. of Colloquies of Erasmus, I. 277.

Aërated waters. See aërate.—Aix-la-Chapelle water, a mineral water obtained from various thermal springs at Aix-la-Chapelle in Rhenish Prussia, containing a large proportion of common salt, also other sodium salts and sulphur.—Aix-les-Bains water, from thermal springs of the same name in Savoy, contains chiefly sulphates and carbonates of sodium, magnesium, and calcium in small proportion, employed in the form of systematic bathing in the treatment of gout, rheumatism, skin-diseases, etc.—Alien water. See alien.—Apollinaris water, an agreeable sparkling water from Rhenish Prussia, containing a very minute proportion of mineral ingredients, used as a table-water.—Bag of waters, in obstet., the bulging fetal membranes, filled with liquor amnii, which act as a hydraulic wedge to dilate the mouth of the womb.—Ballston Spa waters, from Ballston, New York, effervescent waters, containing a large amount of common salt with carbonates of calcium and magnesium. They possess tonic and cathartic properties.—Baryta-water. See baryta.—Basic water. See basic.—Benediction of the waters, in the Gr. Ch., the solemn public ceremony of blessing the water in the phiale, the running waters, and the sea, observed annually with a procession and other rites on the feast of the Epiphany. See holy water, below.—Bethesda water, from Waukesha, Wisconsin, an effervescent water, containing but a small proportion of mineral ingredients: used chiefly in the treatment of urinary disorders and as a table-water.—Between wind and water. See wind[2].—Bitter water, a purgative mineral water having a bitter taste owing to the presence of a large amount of sulphate of magnesium, or Epsom salts. Friedrichshall water is an example of a bitter water.—Black water. Same as pyrosis.—Blue Lick water, a strong sulphur water, containing also a large amount of salt, obtained from the Blue Lick Springs, Kentucky. It possesses cathartic properties, and is used largely in the treatment of catarrhal troubles of the respiratory, digestive, and urinary tracts.—Broken water. See broken.—Buffalo lithia water, an alkaline sulphur water, containing some lithia, from Mecklenburg county, Virginia. It is diuretic and slightly laxative, and is employed in the treatment of lithemia, Bright's disease, and certain forms of dyspepsia.—Burning water†, alcohol. Compare fire-water.

> Take the beste wiyn that ȝe may fynde. . . . But firste ȝe muste distille this wiyn .7. tymes, and thanne haue ȝe good brennynge watir.
> Book of Quinte Essence (ed. Furnivall), p. 4.

Canterbury water, water tinctured with the blood of Thomas Becket, Archbishop of Canterbury, who was murdered in 1170, and afterward canonized as a saint and martyr. See the quotation.

> To satisfy these cravings, so as to hinder an uneasy feeling at the thought of tasting human blood, a tiny drop was mingled with a chalice-full of water, and in this manner given to those who begged a sip. This was the far-famed "Canterbury-water." Never had such a thing as drinking a martyr's blood been done before; never has it been done since. Rock, Church of our Fathers, III. i. 424.

Carbonated water, water charged with carbonic-acid gas: either natural spring-water like seltzer and apollinaris, or distilled water artificially charged with the gas.—Carlsbad water, an alkaline sulphated water, heavily charged with carbonic acid, from various thermal springs in Carlsbad, Bohemia: employed extensively in the treatment of gout, rheumatism, urinary disorders, chronic diseases of the eye and ear, intestinal catarrh, and chronic constipation.—Chow-chow water. See chow-chow.—Clysmic water, an agreeable sparkling table-water, containing chiefly calcium bicarbonate, from Waukesha, Wisconsin. It is used also as a diuretic in bladder troubles.—Cologne water. Same as cologne.—Crab Orchard water, a cathartic water, containing a rather large proportion of magnesium sulphate and a smaller amount of some other sulphates and carbonates, obtained from springs of the same name in Kentucky.—Deep water or waters, water too deep for comfort or safety; hence, figuratively, embarrassment, trial, or distress.

> Let me be delivered from them that hate me, and out of the deep waters. Ps. lxix. 14.

> Once he had been very nearly in deep water because Mrs. Proudie had taken it in dudgeon that a certain young rector, who had been left a widower, had a very pretty governess for his children. Trollope.

False waters, in obstet., a fluid which occasionally collects between the amnion and the chorion.—First water, the highest degree of fineness in a diamond or other precious stone; hence, figuratively, the highest rank morally, socially, or otherwise. The expression first water, when applied to a diamond, denotes that it is free from all traces of color, blemish, flaw, or other imperfection, and that its brilliancy is perfect. Often used attributively.

One comfort, folk are beginning to take an interest in us. I see nobs of the first water looking with a fatherly eye into our affairs. C. Reade. (Dixon.)

Franz-Josef water, a bitter water, containing a small proportion of iron, obtained at Füred, Hungary. It is used as a cathartic, and also in the treatment of chronic rheumatism and catarrhal conditions of the respiratory and alimentary tracts.—Friedrichshall water, a "bitter water" from the village of this name in Germany. It is strongly aperient, containing a large proportion of sulphates and chlorids of magnesium and sodium. It is used as a cathartic and also in diseases of the heart and kidneys and in chronic bronchitis.—Frightened water. See frighten.—Giesshübler water, an agreeable sparkling alkaline water from Giesshübl-Puchstein, near Carlsbad in Bohemia: used as a table-water, and also in cases of uric-acid diathesis and of dyspeptic and other troubles referred thereto.—Goulard water, an aqueous solution containing about 25 per cent. of lead subacetate; the liquor plumbi subacetatis of the United States Pharmacopœia, used as a lotion in inflammation.—Ground water, surface moisture, or the water retained by the porous surface-soil. Ground water flows in accordance with the common law of hydrostatics, but its motion is impeded by friction. Compare ground air, under air[1].—Hard water. See def. 1.—Harrogate waters, chalybeate and sulphur waters from the watering-place of this name in Yorkshire, England. They are aperient, and are used chiefly in the treatment of skin-diseases and of morbid conditions of the intestinal canal.—High water, the greatest elevation of the water at flood-tide; also, the time when such highest point in the flow is reached.

Gaffer was away in his boat; . . . he was not, according to his usual habits at night, to be counted on before next high water. Dickens, Our Mutual Friend, i. 13.

High-water mark, the mark or limit of water at high tide; hence, figuratively, the highest limit attained or attainable: as, the high-water mark of prosperity. Sometimes erroneously written high water-mark.

His [Wordsworth's] "Ode on Immortality" is the high-water mark which the intellect has reached in this age. Emerson, English Traits.

High-water shrub, a shrubby composite plant, Iva frutescens, a native of the United States along the sea-coast from Massachusetts to Texas. Also called marsh-elder.—Holy water, water used for ritual purification of persons and things; especially, water blessed by a Christian priest, and used to sprinkle upon persons or things, or to sign one's self with at entering church. Holy or lustral water has been used in almost all religions in purification of persons and things, especially in preparation for worship, and also to drive away the powers of evil. Under the ancient Jewish law, the priests bathed their hands and feet in a laver before entering the tabernacle or approaching the altar (Ex. xxx. 17–21, xl. 30–32), and the "water of purification" (Num. viii. 7, xix. 9, etc.) presents another analogy to Christian usage. The use of holy water in the Christian church is very ancient. In the Roman Catholic Church holy water is prepared every Sunday by exorcism and benediction of salt, and exorcism and benediction of the water, after which the salt is cast in the water, and both again blessed together. In the Greek Church the use of a holy-water stoup (colymbion) at the entrance of a church is almost obsolete. Holy water is used in the houses, and is blessed on the first of the month in the phiale, and at the Epiphany there is a general blessing of water. See cut under stoup[2], 3.—Holy-water clerk, sprinkler, stick. See holy.—Homburg water, a chalybeate saline water from springs in Homburg near the Rhine: used in the treatment of dyspepsia and disorders of the liver, especially those that have been brought on by high living.—Hot Springs waters, calcic sulphur waters from a number of thermal springs in Hot Springs, Arkansas. They are largely employed in the treatment of syphilis, rheumatism, and chronic diseases of the skin and mucous membranes.—House of water. See house[1].—Hungary water, a preparation of spirits of rosemary, used, especially during the eighteenth century, as a lotion, a perfume, or an internal remedy. The name is said to have been given to it in allusion to a queen of Hungary who tested the efficacy of the water in bathing.

All these Ingredients mention'd are to be had at the Apothecaries, except the Queen of Hungaries Water, which is sold by Mich. Johnson, Bookseller in Leichfield. The Happy Sinner (1691), quoted in N. and Q., 7th ser., [X. 115.

Hunyadi János water, a cathartic water, containing a large percentage of sodium and magnesium sulphates, obtained from Budapest in Hungary.—Interdiction of fire and water. See interdiction.—Jack in the water. See jack[1].—Javelle's water. See eau de Javelle, under eau.—Kissingen water, a mildly laxative water obtained from several springs in the town of this name in Bavaria. It is used in affections of the liver and alimentary canal, chronic bronchitis, and other catarrhal conditions.—La Bourboule water, an arsenical water from La Bourboule, in Puy-de-Dôme, France. It is used in the treatment of various skin-diseases and in chronic malarial troubles.—Lebanon Springs water, a mineral water, containing chiefly carbonates and sulphates, obtained from Lebanon Springs, New York. It is used principally in the treatment of diseases of the digestive and urinary tracts.—Like water, with the ready or abundant flow of water; hence, overflowingly; abundantly; freely: as, to spend money like water.

They came round about me daily like water; they compassed me about together. Ps. lxxxviii. 17.

Lock of water. See lock[1].—Low water, low tide.

Set not her Tongue
A going agen;
Sh' as made more Noise than half a dozen Paper-mills;
London-Bridge at a low Water is Silence to her.
Etherege, Love in a Tub, i. 2.

Low-water alarm. See alarm.—Low-water indicator. See indicator.—Low-water mark, the mark or limit of water at low tide; in a figurative sense, the lowest or a very low point or degree. Sometimes erroneously written low water-mark.

I'm at low water-mark myself — only one bob and a magpie; but, as far as it goes, I'll fork out and stump. Dickens, Oliver Twist.

Low-water slack, the time of slack water at the lowest stage of the tide, when the ebb has done and the flood has not yet made.—Marienbad water, a mineral water from the spa of this name in Bohemia, not far from Carlsbad. The water is used largely in gout, hemorrhoids, obesity, and liver troubles occurring as a result of high living, and also for chronic bronchitis, neuralgia, and cystitis.—Meteoric waters, mineral waters, north water. See the adjectives.—Oil on troubled waters, figuratively, anything done or used to mollify, assuage, or allay: from the smoothing effect of the pouring of oil upon breaking waves, a common resource of modern seamen. The efficacy of oil for such use was known to the ancient Greeks and Romans (see "Notes and Queries," 6th ser., III. 252), and the literal practice no doubt preceded the figurative saying.—Orange-flower water†. Same as orange-water.—Oxygenated water. See oxygenate.—Persicot-water. See persicot.—Pilot's water. See pilot.—Poland Spring water, a water, very weak in mineral constituents, obtained from South Poland, Maine. It is employed chiefly as a table-water and as a diuretic in the treatment of chronic disorders of the urinary tract.—Potash-water. See potash.—Public, quick, quicksilver water. See the qualifying words.—Red water, bloody urine; hematuria.—Richfield Springs water, a sulphur water from the village of the same name in New York State, used largely in the treatment of rheumatism, skin-diseases, and chronic catarrhal affections of the respiratory tract.—Rockbridge Alum Springs water, a tonic water, with astringent taste, obtained in the place of the same name in Virginia. It is employed in the treatment of skin-diseases and catarrhal disorders of the digestive and urinary tracts.—Rosemary water. Same as Hungary water.—Rubinat-Condal water, an aperient water, containing chiefly sodium sulphate, obtained from a spring in the Spanish Pyrenees.—Saratoga waters, various mineral waters, some possessing tonic and others cathartic properties, obtained from Saratoga Springs, New York. They are used in the treatment of certain chronic skin-diseases, constipation, indigestion, and liver disorders, and in catarrhal conditions of the urinary and digestive tracts. Among the best-known of the springs are the Congress, Hathorn, High Rock, Geyser, Pavilion, Seltzer, and Vichy.—Sedative water. See sedative.—Selters water, a highly prized medicinal mineral water found at Nieder-Selters, a village in the province of Hesse-Nassau in Prussia. It contains a considerable quantity of sodium chlorid (common salt), and much smaller quantities of sodium, calcium, and magnesium carbonates. Also called Seltzer water.—Sharon Springs water, a sulphur water from Sharon Springs, New York. It is largely used in the treatment of diseases of the skin, chronic catarrhal conditions of the respiratory and digestive tract, gout, and rheumatism.—Silicious, slack, strong water. See the adjectives.—Soden water, saline chalybeate water from Soden in Hesse-Nassau, Prussia. It is used chiefly in the treatment of chronic catarrhal affections of the respiratory tract and in the early stages of pulmonary consumption.—Soft water. See def. 1.—Sweet water. (a) Fresh as opposed to salt water. See sweet, a., 8. (b) Glycerin. Workshop Receipts, 2d ser., p. 310.—Thermal waters, hot springs.—To be in hot water. See hot[1].—To break water. (a) To appear upon the surface of the water to blow, as a whale making its rising. (b) To float to the surface, as any sunken object.—To cast oil on troubled waters. See oil on troubled waters, above.—To cast (a person's) water. See cast[1].—To cast water into the Thames, to perform unnecessary or useless labor (possibly involving a play on the word Thames, suggesting temse, a sieve).

It is to give him (quoth I) as much almes or neede
As cast water in Tems, or as good a deede
As it is to helpe a dogge over a stile.
J. Heywood, Proverbs (ed. Sharman), p. 69.

To hold water. See hold[1].—To make foul water. See foul[1].—To make water. See make[1].—To pour water on the hands. See hand.—To take water. (a) To allow one's boat to fall into the wake of another boat, as in a race. Hence—(b) To weaken in a contest; back out or back down. [Slang.]—To throw cold water on. See cold.—To tread water. See tread.—Troubled waters, a commotion; trouble; discord. See oil on troubled waters, above.—Under water, below the surface of the water.—Vals water, sparkling alkaline water from Vals in southern France. It is used in dyspepsia, urinary disorders, affections of the liver, obesity, gout, and diseases of the skin.—Vichy water. (a) An alkaline water, containing minute quantities of iron and arsenic, obtained from numerous thermal springs in Vichy, France, and also artificially prepared. It is used in the treatment of chronic catarrhal affections of the intestinal and urinary tracts, gall-stones, lithemia, gout, and rheumatism. (b) A water of somewhat similar composition from the Vichy Spring in Saratoga. See Saratoga waters.—Water bewitched, water slightly flavored, as with liquor; any weak or greatly diluted decoction; figuratively, an insipid, tasteless compound.

Indeed, madam, your ladyship is very sparing of your tea; I protest, the last I took was no more than water bewitch'd. Swift, Polite Conversation, i.

Water-check valve, in a steam-boiler, an automatic valve which prevents the water-supply delivered by the feed-water pipe to the boiler from returning through the pipe after it has entered the boiler. See check-valve.—Water cider. See cider.—Water damaged. Same as water bewitched. Halliwell.—Water in one's shoes†, a source of discomfort or irritation to one.

They caressed his lordship very much as a new comer, whom they were glad of the honour to meet, and talked about a time to dine with him; all which (as they say) was water in his shoes. Roger North, Lord Guilford, i. 295. (Davies.)

Water-of-Ayr stone. See Ayr stone, under stone.—Water of Cotunnius, a fluid filling the space between the osseous and the membranous labyrinth of the ear; the perilymph, technically called liquor Cotunnii.—Water of crystallization. See crystallization.—Water of jealousy (literally, 'water of bitterness'), in the ancient Jewish law, water to be drunk as directed in Num. v. 11–31 by a woman suspected by her husband of unfaithfulness, the act of drinking it serving as a test of innocence or guilt.—Water of life. (a) A liquid giving life or immortality to the drinker; specifically, in Biblical use, spiritual refreshment, strength, or salvation.

I will give unto him that is athirst of the fountain of the water of life freely. Rev. xxi. 6.

(b) Whisky, brandy, or other alcoholic liquor: a translation of the Irish and Gaelic name of whisky, and of the French name of brandy (eau-de-vie). Compare aqua vitæ.

The shepherds . . . were collected together (not without a quench of the mountain-dew, or water of life) in a large shed. J. Wilson, Lights and Shadows of Scottish Life, p. 305.

Water of purification. See holy water.—Water of separation (literally, 'water of uncleanness'), in the ancient Jewish law, water mixed with the ashes of a red heifer burned with cedar-wood, hyssop, and scarlet, used to sprinkle upon unclean persons (Num. xix.).—Water on the brain. See brain.—Water-steam thermometer. See thermometer.—Water venom-globulin, a poisonous principle extracted from serpent-venom.—White Sulphur Springs water, a strong sulphur water from the springs of the same name in Greenbrier county, West Virginia. It is used in the treatment of chronic catarrhal disorders of the digestive and urinary systems, constipation, and various skin-diseases.—White water. (a) Shoal water near the shore; breakers. (b) The foaming water in rapids or swiftly flowing shallows.

The continuous white water of the upper rapids raging round the curve of a steep red bank. Fortnightly Rev., N. S., XLIII. 631.

water (wâ′tėr), v. [< ME. wateren, weteren, watren, wattren, wattrenn, wettrien, < AS. wætrian, water, = D. wateren, water, make water, = MHG. wezzern, G. wässern, irrigate, water (cf. Icel. vatna = Sw. vattna = Dan. vande, water); from the noun.] I. trans. 1. To put water into or upon; moisten, dilute, sprinkle, or soak with water; specifically, to irrigate.

All the grounde throughout the lande of Egipt is continually watred by the water which vppon ye 25 day of August is turned into the cuntries round about. E. Webbe, Travels (ed. Arber), p. 22.

Set fruit-trees round, nor e'er indulge thy sloth,
But water them, and urge their shady growth.
Addison, tr. of Virgil's Georgics, iv.

2. To supply with water for drinking; feed with water: said of animals.

Aft times hae I water'd my steed
Wi' the water o' Wearie's well.
The Water o' Wearie's Well (Child's Ballads, I. 199).

If the inhabitants of a parish have a customary right of watering their cattle at a certain pool, the custom is not destroyed though they do not use it for ten years. Blackstone, Com., I., Int., iii.

3. To produce by moistening and pressure upon (silk, or other fabric) a sort of pattern on which there is a changeable play of light. See watered silk, under watered.

These things [silk and cotton goods] are watered, which very much adds to their beauty; they are made also at Aleppo, but not in so great perfection. Pococke, Description of the East, II. i. 125.

4. To increase (the nominal capital of a corporation) by the issue of new shares without a corresponding increase of actual capital. Justification for such a transaction is usually sought by claiming that the property and franchises have increased in value, so that an increase of stock is necessary in order fairly to represent existing capital. [Commercial slang.]

The stock of some of the railways has been watered to an alarming extent by the issue of fictitious capital, existing only on paper, though ranking equally for dividend—when money for this is forthcoming. Usually, the paper stock has been sold to unwary purchasers. Fortnightly Rev., N. S., XLIII. 857.

To water one's plants†, to shed tears. [Old slang.]

Neither water thou thy plants, in that thou departest from thy pigges nie, neither stand in a mammering whether it bee best to depart or not. Euphues to Philautus, M. 4. (Nares.)

II. intrans. 1. To give out, emit, discharge, or secrete water.

If they suffer the dusts of bribes to be thrown into their sight, their eyes will water and twinkle, and fall at last to blind connivance. Rev. T. Adams, Works, I. 147.

His eyes would have watered with a true feeling over the sale of a widow's furniture.
George Eliot, Mill on the Floss, i. 12.

2. To gather saliva as a symptom of appetite: said of the mouth or teeth, and in figurative use noting vehement desire or craving.

In theyr mindes they conceaued a hope of a daintie banquet, And, espying their enemies a farre of, beganne to swalowe theyr spettle as their mouthes watered for greedines of theyr pray.
Peter Martyr (tr. in Eden's First Books on America, ed. [Arber, p. 181).

Oh, my little green gooseberry, my teeth waters at ye!
Farquhar, Love and a Bottle, v. 1.

The dog's mouth waters only at the sight of food, but the gourmand's mouth will also water at the thought of it. J. Ward, Encyc. Brit., XX. 57.

3. To get or take in water: as, the ship put into port to water; specifically, to drink water.

We watered at the Canaries, we traded with the Salvages at Dominica. Quoted in Capt. John Smith's Works, I. 150.

Were I a poet, by Hippocrene I swear (which was a certain well where all the Muses watered), etc.
Dekker and Webster, Westward Ho, ii. 1.

A Mischance befel the Horse, which lamed him as he went a watering to the Seine. Howell, Letters, I. i. 17.

water-adder (wâ'tėr-ad″ėr), n. An aquatic serpent like, or mistaken for, an adder. (a) The water-moccasin, a venomous snake. See moccasin[2] (with cut). [U. S.] (b) The commonest water-snake of the United States, Tropidonotus (oftener Nerodia) sipedon. This is a large, stout serpent, roughened with keeled scales, and somewhat spotted or blotched, like an adder, especially when young. It bites quite hard in self-defense when attacked, but is not poisonous. [U. S.] waterage (wâ'tėr-āj), n. [< water + -age.] Money paid for transportation by water.

water-agrimony (wâ'tėr-ag″ri-mō-ni), n. An old name of the bur-marigold, Bidens tripartita or B. cernua.

water-aloe (wâ'tėr-al″ō), n. Same as water-soldier.

water-analysis (wâ'tėr-a-nal″i-sis), n. In chem., the analysis of natural waters, either to determine their potable quality, or fitness for use in boilers or otherwise in the arts.

water-anchor (wâ'tėr-ang″kor), n. A sail distended by spars and thrown overboard to hold a vessel's head to the wind and retard her drifting; a drag-anchor. Also called sea-anchor.

water-antelope (wâ'tėr-an″tē-lōp), n. One of numerous different African antelopes, as of the genera Eleotragus, Kobus, and some others, which frequent marshy or reedy places; a reedbuck; a water-buck. See cuts under nagor and sing-sing.

water-apple (wâ'tėr-ap″l), n. The alligator-apple, Anona palustris.

water-arum (wâ'tėr-ā″rum), n. See Calla, 1.

water-ash (wâ'tėr-ash), n. 1. A small tree, Fraxinus Caroliniana, without special value, found in deep river-swamps from Virginia to Texas and in the West Indies.—2. The black, hoop, or ground ash, Fraxinus nigra, of wet grounds in the eastern half of North America. Its tough pliable dark-brown wood is largely used for interior finish and cabinet-work, for making hoops and baskets, etc.

water-avens (wâ'tėr-av″enz), n. A plant, Geum rivale, found in wet meadows northward in both hemispheres. It grows some 2 feet high, and is noticeable for its nodding flowers (large for the genus), with purplish-orange petals, and, in fruit, for its feathery styles and persistent purple calyx. Also purple avens.

water-back (wâ'tėr-bak), n. 1. An iron chamber or reservoir or a combination of pipes, at the back of a cooking-range or other fireplace, to utilize the heat of the fire in providing a supply of hot water.—2. In brewing, a cistern which holds the water used for mashing.

water-bag (wâ'tėr-bag), n. 1. The reticulum of the stomach of the camel and other Camelidæ, corresponding to the honeycomb tripe of ordinary ruminants.—2. In her., a bearing representing a vessel for holding water, usually drawn as if a leather bucket. It differs from water-bouget, or bouget, in retaining the form of the actual vessel.

water-bailage† (wâ'tėr-bā″lāj), n. Bailage upon goods transported by water. See bailage.

Water-baylage, a tax demanded upon all goods by the City, imported and exported.
Pepys, Diary, Jan. 20, 1668-9. (Davies.)

water-bailiff (wâ'tėr-bā″lif), n. 1. A custom-house officer in a port town whose duty is to search ships.

Out of patience with the whole tribe of custom-house extortioners, boatmen, tide-waiters, and water-bailifs, that beset me on all sides, worse than a swarm of musquetoes, I proceeded a little too roughly to brush them away with my rattan. Cumberland, West Indian, i. 5.

2. A former officer of the London corporation who saw to the observance of the statutes and by-laws applicable to the river Thames.—3. See water-bailiff, under bailiff.

water-balance (wâ'tėr-bal″ans), n. An old form of water-raising apparatus, consisting of a series of troughs one above another, supported in a hanging frame, and oscillating like a pendulum. As the frame swings, the water dipped by the lowest trough runs into that next above, and in the return motion it is emptied in turn from that into the next above again, and so on. E. H. Knight.

water-bar (wâ'tėr-bär), n. A ridge crossing a hill or mountain road, and leading aside water flowing down the road.

They . . . were descending, with careful reining in and bearing back, the steep, long plunges—for these mountain roads are like cataract beds, and travellers are like the falling water—where the only break and safety were the water-bars, humping up across the way at frequent intervals. Mrs. Whitney, Odd or Even? xiii.

water-barometer (wâ'tėr-ba-rom″e-tėr), n. A barometer in which water is substituted for mercury. See barometer.

If a long pipe, closed at one end only, were emptied of air, filled with water, the open end kept in water, and the pipe held upright, the water would rise in it nearly twenty-eight feet. In this way water barometers have been made. Fitz Roy, Weather Book, p. 12.

water-barrel (wâ'tėr-bar″el), n. 1. A water-cask.—2. In mining, a large wrought-iron barrel with a self-acting valve in the bottom, used in drawing water where there are no pumps. [South Staffordshire, Eng.]

water-barrow (wâ'tėr-bar″ō), n. A two-wheeled barrow carrying a tank, often swung on trunnions, used by gardeners and others; a water-barrel. E. H. Knight.

water-basil (wâ'tėr-baz″il), n. In gem-cutting, a uniform bevel cut around the top of a stone, after the grinding of the upper flat table.

water-bath (wâ'tėr-bȧth), n. 1. A bath composed of water, in contradistinction to a vapor-bath.—2. In chem., a vessel containing water which is heated to a certain temperature, over which chemical preparations or solutions are placed in suitable vessels to be digested, evaporated, or dried at the given temperature.—3. Same as bain-marie.

Water-baths of various forms (A, B, C), with adjustable rings (a, b, c), to receive vessels of different sizes. B and C are arranged to have a constant water-supply.

water-battery (wâ'tėr-bat″ėr-i), n. 1. In elect. See battery.—2. In fort., a battery nearly on a level with the water.

water-beadle† (wâ'tėr-bē″dl), n. A water-bailiff (?).

In the year 1700 one S. Smith, who is described as water-beadle, of St. Mary Magdalen, Bermondsey, left a legacy to his nephew, Matthew Smith, of this parish.
N. and Q., 7th ser., VIII. 487.

water-bean (wâ'tėr-bēn), n. A plant of the genus Nelumbo.

water-bear (wâ'tėr-bâr), n. A bear-animalcule. See Macrobiotidæ, Arctisca, and Tardigrada.

water-bearer (wâ'tėr-bâr″ėr), n. [< ME. watyr berare = Sw. vattenbärara = Dan. vandbarer; < water + bearer.] 1. One who carries water; specifically, one whose business is the conveying of water from a spring, well, river, etc., to purchasers or consumers.

Yf there be neuer a wyse man, make a water-bearer, a tinker, a cobler, . . . comptroller of the mynte.
Latimer, Sermon on the Plough.

2. [cap.] In astron., a sign of the zodiac. See Aquarius.

water-bearing (wâ'tėr-bâr″ing), n. A journal-box having in the lower part a groove communicating with a pipe through which water under heavy pressure is admitted beneath the journal, which it raises slightly from its bearings. As the journal revolves, the water flows in an exceedingly thin film or sheet between it and the bearings, forming a very efficient lubricant. See cut in next column. Also called palier-glissant and hydraulic pivot.

water-bed (wâ'tėr-bed), n. A large india-rubber mattress filled with water, on which a very sick person, or one who is bedridden, is sometimes placed, to avoid the production of bedsores. Also called hydrostatic bed.

water-beech (wâ'tėr-bēch), n. 1. A small tree, the American hornbeam, Carpinus Caroliniana: so named from its growing in wet ground, and a, wheel; b, b', bearings for the shaft; c, c, hollow supports for bearings; d, d', d'', pipe and branches through which water is forced into the hollow supports c; f, slot through which the water passes into the bearings with sufficient force to support completely the weight of a and the shaft.

from its resemblance, especially in its bark, to the beech. Also called blue-beech.—2. Improperly, the sycamore, or American plane-tree, Platanus occidentalis, growing on low grounds, and having reddish wood like that of the beech.

water-beetle (wâ'tėr-bē″tl), n. A beetle which lives in the water. Such beetles belong mainly to the families Amphizoidæ, Haliplidæ, Dytiscidæ, and Gyrinidæ of the adephagous series, and the Hydrophilidæ of the clavicorn series. The first four are sometimes grouped under the name Hydradephaga, as distinguished from the Geadephaga, or ground-beetles and tiger-beetles. A few other beetles are to some extent aquatic; but the term is restricted to the species of the five families named. See these family names, and cuts under Dytiscus, Gyrinidæ, Hydrobius, Hydrophilidæ, and Ilybius. Compare water-bug.

water-bellows (wâ'tėr-bel″ōz), n. A form of blower used in gas-machines, and formerly to supply a blast for furnaces. It consists essentially of an inverted vessel suspended in water, on raising which in the water air is drawn in through an inlet valve, while on lowering the vessel the air is forced out again through another valve. Such vessels are usually placed in pairs, and are lowered and raised alternately. The device is also used for supplying air to the pipes of a pneumatic clock-system. The central clock lifts the inverted tank, and, letting it fall once a minute, sends a puff of air through the pipes, and thus moves all the hands of the clocks connected with the system.

water-bells (wâ'tėr-belz), n. The European white water-lily, Castalia alba. Britten and Holland. [North Eng.]

water-betony (wâ'tėr-bet″o-ni), n. See Scrophularia.

water-bird (wâ'tėr-bėrd), n. In ornith., an aquatic as distinguished from a terrestrial or aërial bird; in the plural, the grallatorial and natatorial or wading and swimming birds, collectively distinguished from land-birds. The term reflects an obsolete classification in which birds were divided into three main groups, called Aves aëreæ, Aves terrestres, and Aves aquaticæ. These divisions are abolished, but the English names of two of them, land-bird and water-bird, continue in current use because of their convenience. Compare water-fowl, 2.

water-biscuit (wâ'tėr-bis″kit), n. A biscuit or cracker made of flour and water.

water-blackbird (wâ'tėr-blak″bėrd), n. The water-ouzel, Cinclus aquaticus. See Cinclus and dipper, 5. [Ireland and Scotland.]

water-blast (wâ'tėr-blȧst), n. In mining, a method of ventilation, in which an apparatus is employed which is the same in principle as the trompe of the Catalan forge. See trompe[2].

It [the water-blast] is not much employed nowadays, and gives only a low useful effect.
Callon, Lectures on Mining (trans.), II. 441.

water-blebs (wâ'tėr-blebz), n. Pemphigus.

water-blink (wâ'tėr-blingk), n. A spot of cloud hanging in arctic regions over open water, the presence of which it serves to indicate.

The water-blink consists of dark clouds or spots on the horizon, and is formed by the ascending mists which gather in clouds and hang over pools of water. It is always the herald of advance, and is eagerly looked for.
Schley and Soley, Rescue of Greely, p. 160.

water-blinks (wâ'tėr-blingks), n. Same as blinking-chickweed.

water-blob (wâ'tėr-blob), n. A local name of the marsh-marigold, Caltha palustris, of the white water-lily, Castalia alba, and of the yellow water-lily, Nymphæa lutea. Britten and Holland. [Provincial English.]

water-blue (wâ'tėr-blö), n. A coal-tar color used in dyeing, and similar to soluble blue. It is principally used for dyeing cotton.

water-board (wâ'tėr-bōrd), n. A board set up on the edge of a boat to keep off spray, etc.

water-boat (wâ'tėr-bōt), n. A boat carrying water in bulk for the supply of ships.

water-boatman (wâ'tėr-bōt″man), n. 1. The boat-fly or boat-insect, an aquatic bug of the family Notonectidæ: so called because these insects move in the water like a boat propelled by oars. They are more fully called back-swimming water-boatmen, and also back-swimmers, because they row themselves about on their backs with their long feathered oar-like legs. Some species are very common in ponds and brooks in the United States, and are often put in aquariums to exhibit their silvery colors and curious actions. N. undulata is a characteristic example.

Back-swimming Water-boatman (Notonecta undulata), dorsal view, three times natural size.

2. An aquatic bug of the family Corixidæ. All the North American species belong to the genus Corixa, as C. undulata.

★water-borne (wâ′tėr-bōrn), a. Borne or conveyed by water; carried in a boat or vessel; floated.

Thus merchandise might be waterborne from the channel to the Mediterranean.
Motley, Hist. Netherlands, IV. 147.

The stone of which it [bridge from the Strand to the opposite shore of the Thames] was constructed, being water-borne, had to pay this tax.
S. Dowell, Taxes in England, IV. 394.

Water-borne goods, goods carried on shipboard.

water-bottle (wâ′tėr-bot″l), n. A bottle made of glass, skin, rubber, or other material, and designed for holding water.

water-bound (wâ′tėr-bound), a. Impeded, hindered, or hemmed in by water, as in case of a flood, heavy rains, etc.

While water-bound, it [a foraging party] was attacked by guerrillas. New York Tribune, April 30, 1862.

water-box (wâ′tėr-boks), n. A bottom or side of a furnace consisting of a compartment of iron kept filled with water. It serves to prevent the burning out of the iron.

water-brain (wâ′tėr-brān), n. Gid or staggers of sheep, caused by the brain-worm.

water-brain fever. Meningitis; acute hydrocephalus.

water-brash (wâ′tėr-brash), n. Same as pyrosis.

water-braxy (wâ′tėr-brak″sĭ), n. A disease of sheep in which there is hemorrhage into the peritoneal cavity. See braxy.

water-break (wâ′tėr-brāk), n. A wavelet or ripple. [Rare.]

Many a silvery water-break
Above the golden gravel.
Tennyson, The Brook.

water-breather (wâ′tėr-brē″ŦHėr), n. Any branchiate which breathes water by means of gills.

water-bridge (wâ′tėr-brij), n. A fire-bridge which also forms part of the water-space of a boiler. If dependent from the boiler, it is called a hanging bridge; if it has flue-space above and below, it is a midfeather. Also called water-table.

water-brose (wâ′tėr-brōz), n. Brose made of meal and water only. [Scotch.]

I'll sit down o'er my scanty meal,
Be 't water-brose or muslin-kail, Wi' cheerfu' face. Burns, To James Smith.

water-buck (wâ′tėr-buk), n. A water-antelope, especially a kob, as Kobus ellipsiprymnus, which abounds in some African lowlands, as in Nyassa-land. Another water-buck is Cervicapra redunca. See kob, and cuts under singsing and nagor.

Among the ruminants is the dangerous buffalo (Bubalus caffer), the never-to-be-sufficiently-admired giraffe, . . . the gnu, the pallah, the water-buck (Cobus).
Fortnightly Rev., N. S., XLIII. 472.

water-buckler (wâ′tėr-buk″lėr), n. Same as water-shield.

water-budget (wâ′tėr-buj″et), n. In her., same as bouget, 2. Also called dosser.

★water-buffalo (wâ′tėr-buf″a-lō), n. See water-cow.

water-bug (wâ′tėr-bug), n. 1. Any true bug of the heteropterous section Hydrocorisæ or Cryptocerata, including those which live beneath the surface of the water, and belong to the families Corisidæ, Notonectidæ, Nepidæ, Belostomidæ, and Naucoridæ. See these words, and cuts under Belostoma and Ranatra.—2. Any one of certain true bugs of the heteropterous section Aurocorisa, including those which live mainly on the surface of the water, and which belong to the families Hydrobatidæ, Veliidæ, Limnobatidæ, Saldidæ, and Hydrometridæ. See these words.—3. The croton-bug or German cockroach, Blatta (Phyllodromia) germanica: so called from its preference for water-pipes and moist places in houses. See cuts under croton-bug and Blattidæ.—Giant water-bug, any member of the Belostomidæ.

Water-bug (Hydrometra lineata), about three times natural size.

water-butt (wâ′tėr-but), n. 1. A large open-headed cask, usually set up on end in an outhouse or close to a dwelling, serving as a reservoir for rain- or pipe-water.—2. A water-beetle, as Dytiscus marginatus and related species.

water-cabbage (wâ′tėr-kab″āj), n. The American white water-lily, Castalia (Nymphæa) odorata.

water-calamint (wâ′tėr-kal″a-mint), n. The corn-mint, Mentha arvensis.

water-caltrop (wâ′tėr-kal″trop), n. 1. The water-nut, Trapa.—2. A book-name of the pondweeds Potamogeton densus and P. crispus.

water-can (wâ′tėr-kan), n. The yellow water-lily, Nymphæa lutea, or the European white water-lily, Castalia alba: so named from the shape of the seed-vessel. [Provincial English.]

water-cancer, water-canker (wâ′tėr-kan″sėr, -kang″kėr), n. Gangrenous stomatitis, or noma. See noma.

water-cap (wâ′tėr-kap), n. 1. A form of cylindrical diaphragm of copper in the time-fuse of a shell, intended to prevent the fuse from being extinguished by water in ricochet firing.—2. A bird of the subfamily Fluvicolinæ, the species and genera of which are numerous. Also water-chat. See cut under Fluvicola.

water-carpet (wâ′tėr-kär″pet), n. 1. A British geometrid moth, Cidaria suffumata.—2. An American golden-saxifrage, Chrysoplenium Americanum, which spreads on the surface of springs and streams. Wood, Class-book of Bot.

water-carriage (wâ′tėr-kar″āj), n. 1. Transportation or conveyance by water.

In the important matter of water-carriage the farmer in the Canadian Far West has unrivalled advantages.
W. F. Rae, Newfoundland to Manitoba, xiii.

2. The conducting or conveying of water from place to place.

In the water-carriage system each house has its own network of drain-pipes, soil-pipes, and waste-pipes, which lead from the basins, sinks, closets, and gullies within and about the house to the common sewer. Encyc. Brit., XXI. 714.

3. Means of conveyance by water, collectively; vessels; boats. [Rare.]

The most brittle water-carriage was used among the Egyptians, who, as Strabo saith, would sail sometimes in boats made of earthenware. Arbuthnot.

water-carrier (wâ′tėr-kar″i-ėr), n. One who or that which carries water; specifically, an arrangement of wires or the like on which a bucket of water, raised from a well, etc., may be conveyed wherever required, as to a house.—Water-carriers' paralysis, paralysis of the musculo-spiral nerve.

★water-cart (wâ′tėr-kärt), n. A cart carrying water for sale or for watering streets, gardens, etc. For the latter purpose the cart bears a large cask or tank containing water, which, by means of a tube or tubes perforated with holes, is sprinkled on roads and streets to prevent dust from rising, or in gardens to water plants.

water-cask (wâ′tėr-kask), n. A strong light cask used for transporting drinking-water, especially on sea-going ships. Compare water-tank and breaker.

water-caster† (wâ′tėr-kas″tėr), n. A physician who professed to discover the diseases of his patients by "casting" or examining their urine; commonly, a quack.

Wastes much in physicke and her water-caster.
John Taylor, Works (1630). (Nares.)

water-cat (wâ′tėr-kat), n. The nair, or Oriental otter, Lutra nair, translating a Mahratta name.

water-cavy (wâ′tėr-kā″vi), n. The capibara.

water-celery (wâ′tėr-sel″ė-ri), n. 1. The cursed crowfoot, Ranunculus sceleratus, of temperate Europe, Asia, and North America. It has a thick hollow stem a foot or two high, the lower leaves stalked and three-lobed, the petals small, and the carpels very numerous. The juice is very acrid, and is used by beggars to produce sores; but the plant is in some places eaten after boiling.

2. See Vallisneria.

water-cell (wâ′tėr-sel), n. 1. One of several diverticula of the paunch of the camel, serving to store up water. See water-bag, 1.

These, the so-called water-cells, serve to strain off from the contents of the paunch, and to retain in store, a considerable quantity of water. Huxley, Anat. Vert., p. 328.

2. A voltaic cell in which the liquid is pure water.

water-centiped (wâ′tėr-sen″ti-ped), n. The dobson or hellgrammite. See cut under sprawler. [U. S.]

water-charger (wâ′tėr-chär″jėr), n. A device for filling the water-passages of a pump, so that it may act promptly when started.

water-chat (wâ′tėr-chat), n. 1. A bird of the family Henicuridæ.—2. A South American tyrant-flycatcher of the subfamily Fluvicolinæ, of which there are many genera and species; a water-cap. See cut under Fluvicola.

water-check (wâ′tėr-chek), n. A check-valve for regulating a supply of water, as in the Gifford injector. E. H. Knight.

water-chestnut (wâ′tėr-ches″ nut), n. See Trapa.

water-chevrotain (wâ′tėr-shev″rō-tān), n. An aquatic African traguline, Hyomoschus aquaticus, belonging to the family Tragulidæ, and thus related to the kanchil and napu.

water-chicken (wâ′tėr-chik″en), n. The common gallinule, Gallinula galeata. Ralph and Bagg, 1886. [Oneida county, New York.]

water-chickweed (wâ′tėr-chik″wēd), n. 1. A small, smooth, and green tufted herb, Montia fontana, found throughout Europe, in northern Asia, from arctic America down the west coast to California, and in the Andes to their southern extremity. Also blinking-chickweed (which see).—2. A name for Callitriche verna and Alsine aquatica.

water-chinkapin (wâ′tėr-ching″ka-pin), n. The American nelumbo, Nelumbo lutea, or primarily its edible nut-like seed: so named from the resemblance of the seeds to chinkapins. They are borne immersed in pits in the large top-shaped receptacle. Also wankapin, yoncopin.

water-cicada (wâ′tėr-si-kā″dą), n. A water-boatman.

water-clam (wâ′tėr-klam), n. A bivalve of the family Spondylidæ; a thorn-oyster. See cut under Spondylus.

water-clock (wâ′tėr-klok), n. A clepsydra.

A clepsydra, or waterclock, which played upon Flutes the hours of the night at a time when they could not be seen on the index. Dr. Burney, Hist. Music, I. 512.

water-closet (wâ′tėr-kloz″et), n. A privy having some contrivance for carrying off the discharges through a waste-pipe below by the agency of water.

water-cock (wâ′tėr-kok), n. The kora, Gallicrex cristata, a large dark gallinule of India, Ceylon, Java, and islands eastward, horned with a red caruncle on top of the head.

water-colly (wâ′tėr-kol″i), n. The water-ouzel, ★Cinclus aquaticus. [Prov. Eng.]

water-color (wâ′tėr-kul″or), n. 1. Painting, especially artistic painting, with pigments for which water and not oil is used as a solvent.—2. A pigment adapted or prepared for painting in this method.

Some fine colour that may please the eye
Of fickle changelings and poor discontents; . . .
And never yet did insurrection want Such water-colours to impaint his cause.
Shak., 1 Hen. IV., v. 1. 80.

Water-cölours are sold in four forms, in cakes, pastilles, pans, and tubes. Hamerton, Graphic Arts, xxii.

3. A painting executed by this method, or with pigments of this kind.

The Art Galleries opened every year, and, besides the National Gallery, there were the Society of British Artists, the Exhibition of Water Colours, and the British Institution in Pall Mall. W. Besant, Fifty Years Ago, p. 135.

Also used attributively in all senses.

water-colored (wâ′tėr-kul″ord), a. Of the color of water; like water. [Rare.]

The other [sort of cherry], which hangs on the branch like grapes, is water colored within, of a faintish sweet, and greedily devoured by the small birds.
Beverley, Virginia, iv. ¶ 12.

water-coloring (wâ'tėr-kul″o̤r-ing), n. The use of water-colors, or work executed in water-colors or pigments of similar nature. [Trade use.]

The Dutch and rose pinks are sometimes used, but they cannot be relied upon in water-colouring.
Paper-hanger, p. 76.

water-colorist (wâ'tėr-kul″o̤r-ist), n. One who paints in water-colors.

water-comparator (wâ'tėr-kom″pā-rā-tọr), n. An apparatus for comparing thermometers with a standard, consisting essentially of a reservoir containing water, with means for obtaining different temperatures and for maintaining the whole mass at the same temperature during a series of observations.

water-cooler (wâ'tėr-kö″lėr), n. Any device for cooling water; especially, a vessel with non-conducting walls in which water for drinking is placed with ice. Such coolers are fitted with a faucet in the lower part, for drawing off the water. The effect of other coolers is due to evaporation through their porous walls. See olla, 3.

Water-cooler.
a, outer shell; b, non-conducting filling; c, inner shell.

water-core (wâ'tėr-kōr), n. 1. In founding, a hollow core placed inside the mold, within which a current of cold water can be made to pass to absorb the heat and hasten the cooling of the casting: used especially to cool the bore of cast guns.—2. In some forms of car-axle, a quantity of water in a hermetically closed cavity, intended to take up heat from the journals.—3. A blemish, common in some varieties of the apple, in which the flesh about the core assumes a watery, translucent appearance.

watercourse (wâ'tėr-kōrs), n. 1. A stream of water; a river or brook.

The woods climb up boldly along the hillsides, overshadowing every little dingle and watercourse.
Geikie, Geol. Sketches, iii.

2. A channel or canal made for the conveyance of water, or serving for conveyance by water.

Who hath divided a watercourse for the overflowing of waters. Job xxxviii. 25.

Scouring the water-courses thorough the cities;
A fine periphrasis of a kennel-raker.
Fletcher (and another ?), Prophetess, iii. 1.

3. In law, a stream of water, usually flowing in a definite channel having a bed and sides or banks, and usually discharging itself into some other stream or body of water. Bigelow. The condition of being occasionally dry does not deprive it of the character of a watercourse; but occasional flows of water caused by unusual rains, or melting of snow, and following a channel which is usually dry, do not constitute a watercourse. The owner of a watercourse has, within certain limits, a right to have it flow substantially unimpaired by the owners above and below. A grant of a watercourse may mean a grant of (1) the easement or the right to the running of water; (2) the channel which contains the water, the pipe, or drain; or (3) the land over which the water flows. George Jessel, Master of the Rolls.

water-cow (wâ'tėr-kou), n. The common domestic Indian buffalo, Bos bubalus or Bubalus buffelus; the water-buffalo: so called by English residents in translating a Chinese name, from the habit it has of seeking the water to escape the annoyance of insects. It is not a distinct species. The same habit is strongly marked in the African or Cape buffalo, B. caffer, and may be observed of domestic cattle anywhere. See cuts under buffalo.

water-cracker (wâ'tėr-krak″ėr), n. 1. A water-biscuit.—2. A Prince Rupert's drop. See detonating bulb, under detonating.

A water cracker, as they [Prince Rupert's drops] are called in the factory. Sci. Amer., N. S., LVI. 181.

water-craft (wâ'tėr-krâft), n. Vessels and boats plying on water.

water-crake (wâ'tėr-krāk), n. 1. The common spotted crake of Europe, Porzana maruetta: distinguished from the land-crake, Crex pratensis.—2. The water-rail, Rallus aquaticus. Montagu.—3†. The water-ouzel: a misnomer. Willughby; Ray. [Local, Eng.]

water-crane (wâ'tėr-krān), n. 1. An apparatus for supplying water from an elevated tank, as to the tender of a locomotive.—2. A crane operated by hydraulic power.

water-cress (wâ'tėr-kres), n. [< ME. water-kresse, watyr cresse, waterkirs; < water + cress.] A creeping herb of springs and streams, Roripa Nasturtium, from antiquity used as a spring salad, and now very widely cultivated. See cress and Nasturtium, 1 (with cut). The name is extended to the genus—Roripa palustris, a weedy species, being called marsh or yellow water-cress, or marsh-cress.

water-crow (wâ'tėr-krō), n. 1. The common European coot, Fulica atra: from its blackish plumage. [Local, Eng.]—2. The water-ouzel, Cinclus aquaticus. [Local, Eng.]—3. The darter, snake-bird, or water-turkey, Plotus anhinga. [Southern U. S.]

water-crowfoot (wâ'tėr-krō″fůt), n. The name of several aquatic species of Batrachium and Ranunculus, primarily Batrachium aquatile, the common white water-crowfoot. It is found through the north temperate zone and in Australia. The yellow water-crowfoot is Ranunculus delphinifolius.

watercup (wâ'tėr-kup), n. 1. The pennywort, Hydrocotyle: by translation of the genus name.—2. The trumpetleaf, Sarracenia flava.

water-cure (wâ'tėr-kūr), n. Hydrotherapy or balneotherapy; a system of medical treatment by means of water in any form or mode of application.

water-deck (wâ'tėr-dek), n. A painted piece of canvas used for covering the saddle and bridle, girths, etc., of a dragoon's horse. [Eng.]

water-deer (wâ'tėr-dēr), n. 1. A small Chinese musk-deer, Hydropotes inermis, of somewhat aquatic habits. It resembles the ordinary musk-deer in general, being of small size, hornless in both sexes, and with protrusive upper canines in the male; but some technical characters cause it to fall in another genus.—2. The African water-chevrotain. This is a traguloid, quite different from the foregoing.

Chinese Water-deer (Hydropotes inermis).

water-deerlet (wâ'tėr-dēr″let), n. The African water-chevrotain.

water-devil (wâ'tėr-dev″l), n. 1. The larva or grub of various aquatic insects, as of the genus Hydrophilus. H. piceus is a common British species.—2. The dobson or hellgrammite. See Corydalus, and cut under sprawler. [U. S.]

water-dock (wâ'tėr-dok), n. A tall dock, Rumex Hydrolapathum, of temperate Europe and Asia. Also called horse- or water-sorrel. R. aquaticus also appears under this name. The great or American water-dock is R. Britannica.

water-doctor (wâ'tėr-dok″tọr), n. 1. A hydropathist. [Colloq.]—2. One of a former school of medical practitioners the members of which pretended that all diseases could be diagnosticated by simple inspection of the urine.

water-dog (wâ'tėr-dog), n. 1. A dog accustomed to or delighting in the water, or trained to go into the water in pursuit of game, as a water-spaniel.—2. One of various kinds of large salamanders; a mud-puppy. See axolotl, Menopoma, and cut under hellbender. Also water-puppy.—3. A small, irregular, floating cloud in a rainy season, supposed to indicate rain. [Prov. Eng. and Scotch.]

Water-dogs, . . . dark clouds that seem to travel through the air by themselves, and indicate a storm. Halliwell makes them identical with mares-tails, but they are distinct things in Surrey language.
G. L. Gower, Surrey Provincialisms (Eng. Dial. Soc.).

4. A sailor, especially an old sailor; a salt; one thoroughly accustomed to life in and on the water. [Colloq.]

The Sandwich Islanders are complete water-dogs, and therefore very good in boating.
R. H. Dana, Jr., Before the Mast, p. 94.

water-dragon (wâ'tėr-drag″on), n. An old name of the water-arum, Calla palustris, also assigned to Caltha palustris, perhaps by confusion of the Latin names. Britten and Holland.

water-drain (wâ'tėr-drān), n. A drain or channel through which water may run.

water-drainage (wâ'tėr-drā″nāj), n. The draining off of water.

water-dressing (wâ'tėr-dres″ing), n. The constant application of water to a wound, by immersion, irrigation, or compresses.

water-drink† (wâ'tėr-dringk), n. [< ME. water-drinch; < water + drink.] A drink of water.

Alls iff thu drunnke waterrdrinnch.
Ormulum (ed. White), l. 14482.

water-drinker (wâ'tėr-dring″kėr), n. [< ME. water drynkare; < water + drinker.] 1. A drinker of water.

Water drynkare. Aquebibus. Prompt. Parv., p. 518.

2. An advocate of abstinence from intoxicating liquors; a prohibitionist. [Colloq.]

water-drip (wâ'tėr-drip), n. A pan or receptacle to receive the waste water from a water-cooler. Car-Builder's Dict.

water-drop (wâ'tėr-drop), n. A drop of water; specifically, a tear.

Let not women's weapons, water-drops, Stain my man's cheeks! Shak., Lear, ii. 4. 280.

water-dropper (wâ'tėr-drop″ėr), n. A contrivance devised by Sir William Thomson, and used particularly in the measurement of the electrical potential of the atmosphere. It consists of an insulated metallic cylinder containing water, with a projecting nozle, from which the water is allowed to drop freely. Each drop carries with it a small charge, and finally the spout and connecting-rod gain the potential of the air; this may then be measured by a quadrant electrometer.

water-dropwort (wâ'tėr-drop″wėrt), n. The umbelliferous plant Œnanthe fistulosa, or any plant of that genus. The hemlock water-dropwort is the highly poisonous Œ. crocata.

water-dust (wâ'tėr-dust), n. A collective name for the extremely minute droplets or particles of water which compose clouds and haze. [Rare.]

water-eagle (wâ'tėr-ē″gl), n. The fish-hawk or osprey. [Rare.]

watered (wâ'tėrd), a. Marked with or exhibiting waved lines or bands bearing some resemblance to those which might be produced by the action of water. Also waved.—Watered silk, silk upon which a wave-like and changeable pattern has been produced by moistening and pressure. The name is sometimes restricted to material of which the pattern is confined to parallel lines, as distinguished from moire antique. See moire and moiré.

water-elder (wâ'tėr-el″dėr), n. The guelder-rose, Viburnum Opulus.

water-elephant (wâ'tėr-el″ē-fant), n. The hippopotamus or river-horse.

water-elevator (wâ'tėr-el″ē-vā-tọr), n. 1. Any device for raising buckets in wells, or for lifting water to a higher level for purposes of irrigation, etc.—2. A lift or elevator in which the operating force is the weight or pressure of water; a hydraulic elevator.

water-elm (wâ'tėr-elm), n. The common white elm, Ulmus Americana.

water-engine (wâ'tėr-en″jin), n. An engine to raise water; also, an engine propelled by water.

waterer (wâ'tėr-ėr), n. 1. One who waters, in any sense of the word: as, a stock-waterer.

Neither the planter nor the waterer have any power to make it [religion] take root and grow in your hearts.
Locke, Paraphrase on 1 Cor. iii. 7.

2. That with which one waters; a vessel, utensil, or other contrivance for sprinkling water on plants, watering animals, etc.

water-eringo (wâ'tėr-ē-ring″gō), n. A plant, Eryngium yuccifolium, otherwise called button-snakeroot. See Eryngium.

water-ermine (wâ'tėr-ėr″min), n. A British tiger-moth, Spilosoma urticæ, chiefly white and yellow marked with black. [Eng.]

water-extractor (wâ'tėr-eks-trak″tọr), n. In dyeing, a rotatory apparatus for freeing dyed goods from water by the action of centrifugal force.

waterfall (wâ'tėr-fâl), n. [= D. waterval = G. wasserfall (cf. Sw. vattenfall, Dan. vandfald); as water + fall.] 1. A steep fall or flow of water from a height; a cascade; a cataract.

Down shower the gambolling waterfalls.
Tennyson, Sea-Fairies.

2. A neck-tie or scarf with long drooping ends. [Colloq.]

He was suddenly confronted in the walk by Benjamin, the Jew money-lender, smoking a cigar, and dressed in a gaudy-figured satin waistcoat and waterfall of the same material. T. Hughes, Tom Brown at Oxford, II. iii.

3. A chignon. [Colloq.]

The brown silk net, which she had supposed thoroughly trustworthy, had given way all at once into a great hole under the waterfall, and the soft hair would fret itself through and threaten to stray untidily.
Mrs. Whitney, Leslie Goldthwaite, iii.

water-farming (wâ'tėr-fär'ming), n. The cultivation of plants growing in water.

A few miles away, the native lotus grows luxuriantly, a relic, it is believed, of Indian water-farming.
Harper's Mag., LXXVIII. 859.

water-feather, water-featherfoil (wâ'tėr-feᵀᴴ″ėr, -feᵀᴴ″ėr-foil), n. The featherfoil or water-violet Hottonia, especially the British species H. palustris: so named from its finely dissected immersed leaves.

water-fennel (wâ'tėr-fen″el), n. One of the water-dropworts, Œnanthe Phellandrium.

water-fern (wâ'tėr-fėrn), n. 1. A fern of the genus Osmunda; specifically, O. regalis.—2. A plant of the family Marsileaceæ.

water-fight (wâ'tėr-fīt), n. A naval battle. [Rare.]

> Cæsar . . . awaits at anchor the coming of his whole fleet, mean while with his legatts and tribuns consulting, and giving order to fitt all things for what might happ'n in such a various and floating water-fight as was to be expected. Milton, Hist. Eng., ii.

water-figwort (wâ'tėr-fig″wėrt), n. The common European figwort, Scrophularia nodosa.

water-filter (wâ'tėr-fil″tėr), n. An appliance for filtering water; a filter.—Water-filter nut. Same as clearing-nut.

water-finder (wâ'tėr-fīn″dėr), n. One who practises rhabdomancy, or uses the divining-rod to discover water; a bletonist.

water-fire (wâ'tėr-fīr), n. [Tr. of a Tamil name.] A low weed, Bergia ammannioides of the Elatinaceæ, found in rice-fields and marshy grounds in the tropical Old World. The name alludes to a supposed acridity.

water-flag (wâ'tėr-flag), n. The yellow flag, Iris Pseudacorus. Also called yellow iris and flower-de-luce.

water-flannel (wâ'tėr-flan″el), n. A felt-like substance composed of the matted filaments of some conferva or similar alga which multiplies in submerged meadows, and is deposited by the retiring waters.

water-flaxseed (wâ'tėr-flaks″sēd), n. The larger duckweed, Spirodela polyrhiza: so called from the shape and minute size of the fronds.

water-flea (wâ'tėr-flē), n. One of numerous small or minute crustaceans which skip about in the water like fleas, as Daphnia pulex; any branchiopod. See Daphniidæ, Cladocera, Cyclops.

water-float (wâ'tėr-flōt), n. A float placed in a boiler, cistern, etc., to control a valve.

water-flood (wâ'tėr-flud), n. [< ME. waterflod, < AS. wæterflōd; as water + flood.] A flood of water; an inundation.

> Let not the waterflood overflow me. Ps. lxix. 15.

> In the moneth of May, namely on the 2d day, came downe great water floods, by reason of sodaine showres of haile and raine. Stow, Annals, p. 768.

water-flounder (wâ'tėr-floun″dėr), n. The sand-flounder. [Local, U. S.]

waterflow (wâ'tėr-flō), n. A flow or current of water; the amount of water flowing.

> The work concludes with articles on the cost of hydraulic power, and upon meters for measuring waterflow. Westminster Rev., CXXVIII. 247.

water-flowing (wâ'tėr-flō″ing), a. Flowing like water; streaming. [Rare.]

> My mercy dried their water-flowing tears. Shak., 3 Hen. VI., iv. 8. 43.

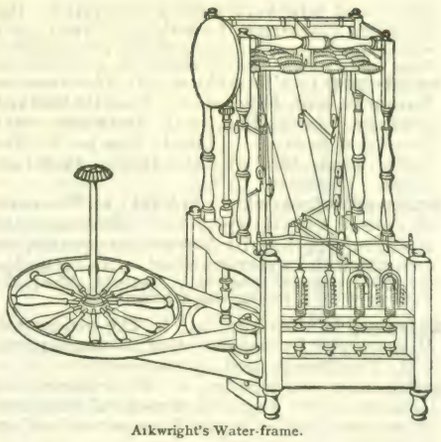
water-fly (wâ'tėr-flī), n. 1. Some winged aquatic insect; specifically, a member of the family Perlidæ; a stone-fly.—2. A source of petty annoyance; an insignificant but troublesome person or thing. [Rare.]



> How the poor world is pestered with such waterflies, diminutives of nature! Shak., T. and C., v. 1. 88.

water-foot (wâ'tėr-fůt), n. One of the ambulacral pedicels of an echinoderm; a tube-foot.

water-fowl (wâ'tėr-foul), n. [< ME. watyr foul; < water + fowl[1].] 1. Same as water-birds.—2. In a restricted sense, swimming birds, especially those which, as the Anseres, are used for food or for any reason engage the attention of sportsmen.

water-fox† (wâ'tėr-foks), n. The carp, Cyprinus carpio: so called from its supposed cunning. I. Walton. Compare water-sheep.

water-frame (wâ'tėr-frām), n. The original spinning-frame invented by Arkwright, which was driven by water-power (whence the name). Otherwise called throstle and throstle-frame. See cut in next column.

Arkwright's Water-frame.

water-fright (wâ'tėr-frīt), n. Hydrophobia.

water-fringe (wâ'tėr-frinj), n. See Limnanthemum.

water-furrow (wâ'tėr-fur″ō), n. [< ME. waterforowe, waterfoore; < water + furrow.] In agri., the open furrow between two ridges or lands serving for drainage and other purposes.

> Waterforowe, in londe. Elicus, sulcus. Prompt. Parv., p. 518.

water-furrow (wâ'tėr-fur″ō), v. t. [< water-furrow, n.] To plow or open water-furrows in; drain by means of water-furrows.

> Seed husbandly sowen, water-furrow thy ground, That rain when it cometh may run away round. Tusser, October's Husbandry, st. 7.

water-gage (wâ'tėr-gāj), n. 1. Any device for indicating the height of water in a reservoir, tank, boiler, or other vessel. The most common form is a glass tube placed on the front of a boiler, and connected at the top with a pipe opening into the steam-space above the water and below with a pipe opening into the water in the boiler. The water and steam fill the tube and indicate the height of the water in the boiler. See gage-cock. Also called water-indicator.

Water-gage.

a, upper cock communicating with steam-space; a', lower cock communicating with water-space; b, glass; c, water-line.

2. A wall or bank to restrain or hold back water.

water-gall (wâ'tėr-gâl), n. [Also dial. water-geal, water-gull; = G. wasser-galle, a cavity in the earth made by a torrent, a bog, quagmire, < wasser, water, + galle, seen also in G. regen-galle, an imperfect rainbow, end or fragment of a rainbow, an oxeye, water-gall, weather-gall, appar. in orig. like Icel. galli, a defect, flaw, hence a barren spot: see gall[2].] 1. A cavity made in the earth by a torrent of water. Imp. Dict.—2. An appearance in the sky regarded as presaging the approach of rain; a rainbow-colored spot; an imperfectly formed or a secondary rainbow. Also called weather-gall.

> And round about her tear-distained eye
> Blue circles stream'd, like rainbows in the sky;
> These water-galls in her dim element
> Foretell new storms. Shak., Lucrece, l. 1588.

> Their reason is but a low, obscure, and imperfect shadow thereof, as the water-gall is of the rain-bow. Sir M. Hale, Orig. of Mankind, p. 50.

> I am told a second rainbow above the first is called in the Isle of Wight a watergeal. Halliwell (under water-dogs).

water-gang† (wâ'tėr-gang), n. A trench or course for conveying a stream of water; a mill-race. Jamieson. [Obsolete or Scotch.]

water-gap (wâ'tėr-gap), n. See gap, 2.

water-gas (wâ'tėr-gas), n. A gas, non-luminous in its pure form, derived in part from the decomposition of steam. The apparatus for making it consists of a furnace for anthracite coal or other fuel, connected at the top with a tower filled with loose brick and called a regenerator. The products of combustion pass through the regenerator, and raise it to a white heat. Steam is then admitted below the furnace, and, passing upward through the fire and through the regenerator, is decomposed. While the steam is passing the furnace, either coal reduced to dust or crude naphtha is allowed to fall through the ascending steam over the fire. Complicated chemical reactions take place, the result being the formation of quantities of fixed gas. There are also other methods closely allied to this. By one process the non-luminous gas is afterward enriched by the addition of a hydrocarbon, as petroleum or naphtha. Water-gas is commonly thus treated, and used as an illuminating gas; but it is also used, in its non-luminous form, as a heating gas for cooking and other purposes.

water-gate (wâ'tėr-gāt), n. [ME. watergate; < water + gate[1].] 1. A gateway through which water passes, or a gate by which it may be excluded or confined; a flood-gate.

> Fro heven, oute of the watirgatis,
> The reyny storme felle doun algatis.
> Gower, Conf. Amant., iii.

2. A gate by which access is gained to a river, fountain, well, or other body or supply of water.

> And at the fountain gate . . . they went up by the stairs of the city of David, at the going up of the wall, above the house of David, even unto the water gate eastward. Neh. xii. 37.

> As they reached the water-gate, the rain had ceased for a time, and a gleam of sunlight shone upon the river, and rested on the Queen's barge as it approached. J. H. Shorthouse, John Inglesant, iv.

3. A water-plug or valve. E. H. Knight.

water-gavel (wâ'tėr-gav″el), n. In Eng. law, a rent paid for fishing or any other benefit derived from a river.

water-germander (wâ'tėr-jėr-man″dėr), n. A plant, Teucrium Scordium.

water-gilder (wâ'tėr-gil″dėr), n. One who practises the art of water-gilding.

water-gilding (wâ'tėr-gil″ding), n. Same as wash-gilding.

water-gillyflower (wâ'tėr-jil″i-flou-ėr), n. The water-violet, Hottonia palustris.

water-gladiole (wâ'tėr-glad″i-ōl), n. See flowering rush (under rush[1]).

water-glass (wâ'tėr-glâs), n. 1. A water-clock or clepsydra.

> Full time of defence measured by the water-glass. Grote, Hist. Greece, ii. 72.

2. An instrument for making observations beneath the surface of water, consisting of a tube with a glass bottom; a water-telescope.

> With a water-glass over the side, you look down on the bright array of fishes, whose every movement you can note. Fortnightly Rev., N. S., XXXIX. 180.

3. Same as soluble glass (which see, under glass).

> Water-glass painting may be explained . . . very briefly. It is simply water-colour on dry plaster, fixed afterwards with a solution of flint applied to it in spray as the solution of gum-lac is applied to a charcoal drawing. Hamerton, Graphic Arts, p. 236.

water-glue† (wâ'tėr-glō), n. Waterproof glue.

> The strings [of bows] being made of verie good hempe, with a kinde of waterglewe to resist wet and moysture. Sir J. Smyth, quoted in Ellis's Lit. Letters, p. 54.

water-god (wâ'tėr-god), n. In myth., a deity that presides over the waters, or over some particular body, stream, or fountain of water.

water-grampus (wâ'tėr-gram″pus), n. Same as grampus, 4.

water-grass (wâ'tėr-grâs), n. 1. The manna-grass, Panicularia fluitans. [Fishermen's name.]—2. A very succulent grass, Paspalum læve. [Southern U. S.]—3. The water-cress, Roripa Nasturtium. [Ireland.]—4. Species of Equisetum.—5. The velvet-grass, Holcus. Britten and Holland. [Prov. Eng.]

water-gruel (wâ'tėr-grö″el), n. Gruel made of water and meal, flour, etc., and eaten without milk; thin or weak gruel.

> I could eat water-gruel with thee a month for this jest, my dear rogue. B. Jonson, Cynthia's Revels, ii. 1.

> Was ever Tartar fierce or cruel > Upon the Strength of Water-Gruel?
> Prior, Alma, iii.

water-guard (wâ'tėr-gärd), n. A river or harbor police; customs officers detailed to watch ships in order to prevent smuggling or other violations of law.

water-gull (wâ'tėr-gul), n. A dialectal form of water-gall.

water-gum (wâ'tėr-gum), n. A small tree of New South Wales, Tristania neriifolia, the timber of which is close-grained and elastic, and valuable for boat-building.

water-gut (wâ'tėr-gut), n. An alga of the genus Enteromorpha, of the family Ulvaceæ. The most general form, Enteromorpha intestinalis, occurs occasionally in fresh as well as salt water, but this, with other species, is very common on tidal rocks. When floating in the water these plants very much resemble the intestines of an animal (whence the name).

water-hairgrass (wâ'tėr-hār″gras), n. A grass, Catabrosa aquatica, growing in shallow water, widely in the north temperate zone, having a panicle with many half-whorls of slender branches. Also water-whorlgrass.

water-hammer (wâ'tėr-ham″ėr), n. 1. The concussion which results when a moving volume of water in a pipe or passage is suddenly arrested.—2. The noise, resembling a blow of a hammer, caused by the rush of water into the vacuum produced when live or hot steam meets relatively cool water in a closed space.—3. A philosophical toy consisting of a hermetically sealed tube from which the air has been exhausted and which contains some water. It is so called because the water strikes against the tube with a noise similar to that of a hammer, there being no air to impede its motion.

4. A metal hammer heated in a flame or in boiling water. Tapping the skin with this hammer for a few seconds will cause a blister. It is used as a counter-irritant or a mild cautery.

water-hare (wâ'tėr-hâr), n. 1. The water-rabbit. See cut under swamp-hare.—2. The spotted cavy, or paca, Cœlogenys paca.

water-haze (wâ'tėr-hāz), n. Haze composed of water-particles, as distinguished from haze consisting mainly of particles of dust and organic matter. See haze[1].

water-heater (wâ'tėr-hē″tėr), n. A heating-apparatus which performs its functions by the agency of hot water.

water-hemlock (wâ'tėr-hem″lok), n. 1. See Cicuta.—2. The hemlock water-dropwort, Œnanthe crocata, otherwise called dead-tongue; also Œ. Phellandrium, distinguished as fine-leafed water-hemlock.

water-hemp (wâ'tėr-hemp), n. 1. See Virginian or water hemp, under hemp.—2. The hemp-agrimony, Eupatorium cannabinum.

water-hen (wâ'tėr-hen), n. Some aquatic bird likened to a hen. (a) The moor-hen or gallinule of Great Britain, Gallinula chloropus. (b) The American coot, Fulica americana. [Massachusetts.] (c) An Australian bird of the rail family and genus Tribonyx. See cut under Tribonyx, and compare water-cock.—Spotted water-hen. Same as spotted rail. See rail[4]. [Local, Eng.]

water-hickory (wâ'tėr-hik″ō-ri), n. Same as bitter pecan (which see, under pecan).

water-hoarhound (wâ'tėr-hōr″hound), n. A plant of the genus Lycopus, chiefly L. Europæus.

water-hog (wâ'tėr-hog), n. 1. The African river-hog, Potamochœrus penicillatus. See cut under Potamochœrus.—2. The South American capibara, Hydrochœrus capibara. Also called tailless hippopotamus and short-nosed tapir.

water-hole (wâ'tėr-hōl), n. A hole or hollow where water collects. In Australia, a small natural or artificial reservoir; in South Africa, a natural pool, or water-pool. This word is chiefly used in Australia, where it means a small pond or pool of water, and especially such as are filled during the rainy season and dry up when that ceases, or soon after.

In the dry weather, as the small lagoons and water-holes scattered all over the country [Australia] get low and dried up, large numbers of . . . wild ducks congregate on the big lagoon in front of Mount Spencer station.
H. F. Hatton, Advance Australia, p. 88.

We have been drafting close here up at the one-eyed waterhole. Mrs. Campbell Praed, The Head-Station, p. 84.

waterhole (wâ'tėr-hōl), v. i.; pret. and pp. waterholed, ppr. waterholing. [< water-hole, n.] In coffee-cultivation. See the quotation.

A third operation is called "trenching," or waterholing. The trenches are made across the slope, and . . . the holes are left open to act as catch-drains, and as receptacles for wash, weeds, prunings, and other vegetable matters. Spons' Encyc. Manuf., I. 698.

water-horse (wâ'tėr-hôrs), n. Same as horse-pile.

water-horsetail (wâ'tėr-hôrs″tāl), n. A plant of the genus Chara.

water-house† (wâ'tėr-hous), n. A house or dwelling upon the water; a ship.

The thing by her commanded is to see Dover's dreadful cliff; passing, in a poor water-house, the dangers of the merciless channel 'twixt that and Calais, five long hours' sail, with three poor weeks' victuals.
Beau. and Fl., Scornful Lady, i. 1.

water-hyssop (wâ'tėr-his″op), n. See Herpestis.

water-ice (wâ'tėr-īs), n. A preparation of water and sugar, flavored and frozen; a sherbet.

water-inch (wâ'tėr-inch), n. In hydraul., a measure of water equal to the quantity discharged in 24 hours through a circular opening of 1 inch diameter leading from a reservoir, under the least pressure—that is, when the water is only so high as just to cover the orifice. This quantity is very nearly 500 cubic feet.

water-indicator (wâ'tėr-in″di-kā-tor), n. A device for indicating the height of water in a boiler or a tank, or for giving an alarm by permitting steam to escape, sounding a whistle, etc., when the water falls below a certain level; a water-gage.

wateriness (wâ'tėr-i-nes), n. The state of being watery. Arbuthnot.

watering (wâ'tėr-ing), n. [< late ME. watrynge, watringe (= MLG. wateringe = MHG. wezzerunge, G. wässerung); verbal n. of water, v.] 1. The act of one who waters, in any sense.

Doth not each one of you on the sabbath loose his ox or his ass from the stall, and lead him away to watering?
Luke xiii. 15.

The clouds are for the watering of the earth.
Bacon, Advancement of Learning, ii. 168.

Specifically—2. The art or process of giving to the surface of anything a wave-like or veined appearance of somewhat ornamental effect; also, the marking so produced. Compare water, v. t., 3, and watered silk (under watered).—3. A watering-place: as, "the wateryng of Seint Thomas" (better known as St. Thomas a Waterings), Chaucer, Gen. Prol. to C. T., l. 826.—4. In flax-manuf., same as retting, 1.—Watering of the mouth, an abundant secretion of saliva excited, through a reflex nervous influence, by the suggestion, smell, or sight of appetizing food.

watering-call (wâ'tėr-ing-kâl), n. Milit., a call or sound of a trumpet on which cavalry assemble to water their horses.

watering-can (wâ'tėr-ing-kan), n. Same as watering-pot.

watering-cart (wâ'tėr-ing-kärt), n. 1. A barrel or cistern mounted on wheels, used for watering plants. Various special forms are made, as one for watering plants in drills, the water escaping through perforated pipes set at the proper distances apart.
2. A large tank, of whatever form, mounted on a wagon-body, used for watering streets.

watering-house (wâ'tėr-ing-hous), n. A house or tavern where water is obtained for cab-horses, etc. Compare waterman, 2.

Carriages . . . roll swiftly by; watermen, . . . who have been shouting and rushing about for the last two hours, retire to their watering-houses, to solace themselves with the creature comforts of pipes and purl.
Dickens, Sketches, Scenes, ii.

watering-place (wâ'tėr-ing-plās), n. [< ME. watrynge-place; < watering + place.] 1. A place where water may be obtained, as for drinking, for watering cattle, or for supplying ships.

Watrynge Place, where beestys byñ wateryd.
Prompt. Parv., p. 518.

The force will have to trust to known watering-places where there are wells.
Col. Farquhar, in E. Sartorius's In the Soudan, p. 56.

2. Especially, a place of resort for a particular kind of water, as mineral water; a well, spring, town, etc., famous for its waters; in later use, a bathing-place; a seaside resort; loosely, any summer resort.

The discovery of a saline spring . . . suggested to a too constructive brain the possibility of turning Treby Magna into a fashionable watering-place.
George Eliot, Felix Holt, iii.

The term [watering-places] was naturally extended to include places resorted to for sea bathing, and sometimes, as at Scarborough, the visitors could either have the benefit of the spa or the salt water, that famous watering-place having both of these attractions.
N. and Q., 7th ser., VII. 378.

watering-pot (wâ'tėr-ing-pot), n. 1. A vessel, usually a somewhat tall can, most often of cylindrical section, sometimes oval, with a long spout springing from near the base, used for watering plants and for other similar purposes, as sprinkling sidewalks. The spout is generally fitted with a rose, often movable, for distributing the water in a number of fine streams. It is usually made of tin-plate or galvanized sheet-iron, and is intended to be managed by hand. Also called watering-can.

2. In conch., any species of the genus Aspergillum (or Brechites), as A. vaginiferum. These are true bivalves of the family Clavagellidæ, not distantly related to the teredos, and all bore into hard substances. The valves proper are very small in comparison with the long hard tube with which they are soldered. The species named has this tube cylindrical and clubbed or knobbed at both ends, with one end closed by a perforated plate, the whole formation suggesting the sprinkler of a watering-pot. It inhabits the Red Sea, and other species of Aspergillum are found in Indo-Pacific waters. Also called watering-pot shell.

Watering-pot (Aspergillum vaginiferum), one half natural size. a, the pair of small valves.

watering-trough (wâ'tėr-ing-trôf), n. A trough in which water is provided for domestic animals.

water-injector (wâ'tėr-in-jek″tor), n. See injector.

waterish (wâ'tėr-ish), a. [Formerly also watrish; < ME. waterish,* < AS. wæterisc; as water + -ish[1].] 1. Abounding in or containing water; sprinkled, moistened, or diluted with water; watery; aqueous.

Frost is wheresoever is any waterish humour, as is in all woods, either more or less; and you know that all things frozen and icy will rather break than bend.
Ascham, Toxophilus (ed. 1864), p. 115.

Not all the dukes of waterish Burgundy
Can buy this unprized precious maid of me.
Shak., Lear, i. 1. 261.

2. Consisting mainly of water; hence, thin; weak; poor.

Such nice and waterish diet. Shak., Othello, iii. 3. 15.

3. Juicy; succulent. [Rare.]

The Summer
Invited my then ranging eies to look on Large fields of ripen'd corn, presenting trifles
Of waterish pettie dainties.
Dekker and Ford, Sun's Darling, iv.

4. Pertaining to water, or having something of its characters; insipid: as, a waterish color or feel.

Some [flowers] of a sad or darke greene, some watrishe, blunkette, gray, grassie, hoarie, and Leeke coloured.
Touchstone of Complexions, p. 100.

Of watrish taste, the flesh not firme, like English beefe.
Hakluyt's Voyages, I. 386.

waterishness (wâ'tėr-ish-nes), n. The state or character of being waterish.

Waterishness, which is like the serosity of our blood.
Floyer.

water-jacket (wâ'tėr-jak″et), n. A casing containing water placed about something to keep it cool, or otherwise regulate its temperature. Compare water-mantle and water-box.

water-joint (wâ'tėr-joint), n. A joint through which water will not leak, as in the framework of a water-gate, the junction of two water-pipes, the gates of canal-locks, etc water-junket (wâ'tėr-jung″ket), n. The common sandpiper of Great Britain, Tringoides hypoleucus.

water-kelpie (wâ'tėr-kel″pi), n. A spirit or demon supposed to dwell in water. See kelpie.

The bonny grey mare did sweat for fear,
For she heard the water-kelpy roaring.
Annan Water (Child's Ballads, II. 189).

water-kind† (wâ'tėr-kīnd), n. [< ME. water-kinde; < water + kind[1].] Water; the elements of water.

Latin boc seȝȝth thatt Ennou Bitacneththh waterrkinde.
Ormulum (ed. White), l. 18087.

water-lade (wâ'tėr-lād), n. A channel or trench for conducting water; a drain, a gutter.

The chanels were not skoured . . . for riverets and Brookes to passe away, but the water-lades stopped up either through negligence or depopulation.
Holland, tr. of Camden, p. 741. (Davies.)

water-laid (wâ'tėr-lād), a. Noting three ropes laid into one: same as cable-laid.

Waterlander (wâ'tėr-lan-dėr), n. [< D. Waterland, a district in North Holland, + -er[1].] One of the liberal wing of the Mennonites of the Netherlands. Beginning with less strict views of excommunication than those of the conservative wing, they gradually moved in the direction of still greater liberality, exchanged the name of Mennonites for Doopsgezinden (Baptist persuasion), refused to condemn any one for opinions which the Bible did not expressly pronounce essential to salvation, coöperated with William the Silent, and even accepted civil office. The division between them and their opponents gradually disappeared, and the two wings are now united in Holland on substantially the liberal basis of the Waterlanders. Encyc. Brit., XVI. 12.

water-language (wâ'tėr-lang″gwāj), n. Jocose abuse; chaff. [Rare.]

'Twas all water-language at these times, and no exceptions were to be taken. Amhurst, Terræ Filius, No. 1.

water-laverock (wâ'tėr-lav″ėr-ok), n. Same as sandy laverock (which see, under laverock).

water-leader† (wâ'tėr-lē″dėr), n. [< ME. waterleder (cf. D. waterleiding = G. wasserleitung = Sw. vattenledning = Dan. vandledning, aqueduct); < water + leader[1].] A water-carrier.

The cokis and watir-lederes. York Plays, p. 307.

waterleaf (wâ'tėr-lēf), n. 1. Any plant of the genus Hydrophyllum (which see).—2. Paper in the first stage of manufacture, after it has been pressed between the felts: a technical use.

The structure of the waterleaf may be regarded as an interlacement of vegetable fibres in every direction.
Ure, Dict., III. 514.

water-leech† (wâ'tėr-lēch), n. [< ME. waterleche, watereleche; < water + leech[2].] Same as horse-leech.

Waterlechis two ben dogtris, seiende, Bring on, bring on.
Wyclif, Prov. xxx. 15.

water-leg (wâ'tėr-leg), n. In steam-boilers, a vertical water-space connected with other water-spaces, or crossing a flue-space, so that its contents are heated.

water-lemon (wâ'tėr-lem″on), n. A species of passion-flower, Passiflora laurifolia, native in the West Indies and tropical South America, and cultivated there and in other warm countries; also, and primarily, its fruit. The latter is lemon-colored, oval in form, of the size of a peach, having a soft skin, and a very juicy pulp of a pleasant subacid flavor. The vine has the leaves entire, the flowers white with red blotches, the crown violet with white streaks. P. maliformis, the sweet calabash, with a smaller fruit of similar flavor, is sometimes included under the name. The wild water-lemon is P. fœtida, otherwise called (West Indian) love-in-a-mist, bearing a delicate fruit of the size of a small cherry, but having ill-smelling leaves.

water-lens (wâ'tėr-lenz), n. A simple kind of lens, formed by a few drops of water placed in a small brass cell with blackened sides, and having a glass bottom. The upper surface of the water is more or less curved according to the diameter of the tube, and sometimes the convexity (and hence the magnifying power) can be raised by a screw at the side.

water-lentil (wâ'tėr-len″til), n. See lentil.

waterless (wâ'tėr-les), a. [< ME. waterles, waterlees, < AS. wæterleás, without water; as water + -less.] Lacking water; unsupplied or unmoistened with water; of a fish, out of water.

A monk whan he is recchelees
Is likned til a fish that is waterlees.
Chaucer, Gen. Prol. to C. T., l. 180.

Frankincense, for which of old they went Through plain and desert waterless, and faced
The lion-haunted woods that edged the waste.
William Morris, Earthly Paradise, III. 217.

water-lettuce (wâ'tėr-let″is), n. See Pistia.

water-level (wâ'tėr-lev″el), n. 1. The surface of the water in any vessel or reservoir, natural or artificial, in which water is standing, as in a well, canal, pond, lake, etc.; also, the plane of saturation beneath the surface of the ground, or the plane below which the soil or rock remains saturated with water under the ordinary conditions of rainfall, etc.

But in strata occupying such a position, as well as in the gravel, all wells must be sunk by digging, and not bored, to the natural water-level, there being no superincumbent impermeable stratum to keep down the water at a level below that to which it would naturally have a tendency to rise.
Prestwich, Water-Bearing Strata of London, p. 6.

2. A leveling-instrument in which water is employed instead of mercury or spirit of wine. It consists of a tin tube, about 3 feet long, bent at right angles at each end, with a small short tube soldered on it at its center, by the aid of which it can be fixed upon some kind of a support or tripod. In the bent ends of the long tube are inserted two small glass vials with their bottoms cut off. Enough water is then poured in to about half fill the bottles when the instrument is level. By sighting across the surface of the water a level-line is got. The extreme cheapness and portability of this level make it serviceable sometimes, although it gives but a rough approximation to accuracy as compared with the best kind of spirit-level.

water-lily (wâ'tėr-lil″i), n. [< ME. watir-lili, watyr-lyly; < water + lily.] 1. A plant of the genus Castalia, which contains about 25 species distributed nearly throughout the world, but most freely in the northern hemisphere and the tropics. They are aquatic plants with a perennial rootstock, orbicular floating leaves, and large flowers, single on long scapes riding on the surface of the water. The flowers have numerous petals of a delicate texture, forming when expanded nearly a hemisphere — white, blue, red, or yellow. Several white water-lilies are the most familiar. The common European species is Castalia alba, with leaves 6 or 8 and flowers 3 or 4 inches in diameter. The ordinary American species is C. odorata, with very sweet-scented flowers often 5½ inches wide, and leaves 5 to 9 inches broad, varying in color to pinkish or even bright pink-red, especially at Barnstable, Massachusetts. In the interior United States is found C. tuberosa, with considerably larger leaves and flowers, scentless or slightly apple-scented, and always white — the rootstock bearing numerous self-detaching tubers. The golden water-lily, C. flava, of Florida, which long escaped the notice of botanists, is a locally abundant species of moderate dimensions, with yellow flowers. C. Lotus, the specific Egyptian water-lily, with white, pink, or red flowers, and C. cærulea, the blue water-lily, also of Egypt, are named among the lotuses. C. thermalis (Nymphæa thermalis of de Candolle) is a rare species occurring in warm springs in Hungary, and called Hungarian lotus. The Australian water-lily, C. gigantea, has the leaves in the larger specimens 18 inches broad, the flowers a foot broad with over 200 stamens, the petals blue, purple, pink, or rarely white. Another general name of the water-lilies is water-nymph. See Nymphæa.

2. The pond-lily, or yellow water-lily, Nymphæa lutea. See pond-lily. — 3. In general, any plant of the family Nymphæaceæ, the water-lily family. See the phrases below. — Blue water-lily. See def. 1. — Dwarf water-lily. Same as fringed water-lily, below. — Egyptian water-lily. See def. 1. — Fringed water-lily. See Limnanthemum. — New Zealand water-lily. See Ranunculus. — Prickly water-lily, Euryale ferox, which has the calyx and the under side of the leaves spiny. It is cultivated in India and China for its farinaceous seeds. See Euryale, 2. — Royal water-lily, Victoria Amazonica. See Victoria, 2. — Sweet-scented water-lily, Castalia odorata. See def. 1. — Victoria water-lily. See Victoria, 2. — White water-lily. See def. 1. — Yellow water-lily. See def. 2.

water-lime (wâ'tėr-līm), n. Hydraulic lime. See hydraulic. — Water-lime group, in geol., a group of strata in New York overlying the Salina group and forming the upper section of the Upper Silurian, according to the nomenclature of the New York Geological Survey. This group is of great economic importance in Ulster and Erie counties, New York, as furnishing a considerable part of the hydraulic cement manufactured in the United States. It is not homogeneous paleontologically, and on the basis of its fossils is divided into the Cobleskill dolomite at the bottom followed above by the Rondout dolomite and Manlius limestone.

water-line (wâ'tėr-līn), n. 1. The line in which water at its surface verges or borders upon a floating body. In a vessel the light water-line is the one at which it floats when light or unladen, the load water-line or deep water-line that at which it floats when fully laden. In naval architecture a water-line is one of a series of curvilinear lines on the surface of a vessel made by the intersection of imaginary water-planes parallel to the keel or to the load water-line. They show as straight horizontal lines in the body-plan and sheer-plan and in their true shape in the half-breadth plan. See cut under forebody.

2. Same as water-level, 1. [Rare.]

The [mineral] deposits are much more valuable where they are now worked . . . than they will be below water-line.
New York Tribune, Nov. 7, 1879.

3. A semi-transparent line or mark formed in paper during its manufacture; a water-mark. De Morgan, Arithmetical Books, xiii. — Inclined water-line, the intersection of a longitudinal water-plane when the ship is heeled over at an angle.

water-lined (wâ'tėr-līnd), a. Marked with water-lines: as, Irish linen water-lined paper.

water-liverwort (wâ'tėr-liv″ėr-wėrt), n. The water-crowfoot, Batrachium aquatile.

water-lizard (wâ'tėr-liz″ärd), n. 1. An aquatic amphibian with four legs and a tail, as a mud-puppy, water-dog, or hellbender. See triton, newt, and cuts under hellbender, Menobranchus, axolotl, and newt. [United States.] — 2. A water-monitor or varan. See cut under Hydrosaurus.

water-lobelia (wâ'tėr-lō-bē″liạ), n. See Lobelia, 2.

water-lock (wâ'tėr-lok), n. Same as lock[1], 8. Blount, Glossographia, 1670.

water-locust (wâ'tėr-lō″kust), n. A small species of honey-locust, Gleditschia monosperma, found in the southern United States, especially westward, in the bottom-lands, where it occupies large areas. The wood is of a rich dark-brown color, heavy, hard, and susceptible of polish. Also called swamp-locust.

water-logged (wâ'tėr-logd), a. [< water + logged*, of uncertain origin. In a view commonly accepted, logged, lit. 'rendered log-like,' i. e. heavy or clumsy in consequence of being filled with water; < log[1] + -ed[2]. In another view, logged is lit. 'laid' or 'placed,' after Sw. vatten-lagga, lay in water, soak. Other explanations have been proposed; but none accurately applies to water-logged, except by assuming some confusion of the second element. In present use the word is undoubtedly associated with log[1].] Saturated or filled with water: applied specifically to a ship when by leaking and receiving a great quantity of water into her hold she has become so heavy as to be nearly or altogether unmanageable, though still keeping afloat.

In the course of the summer I had discovered a raft of pitch-pine logs with the bark on. . . . Though completely waterlogged and almost as heavy as lead, they not only burned long, but made a very hot fire.
Thoreau, Walden, p. 268.

The next day the Bon Homme Richard, quite water-logged, sank, with all the wounded on board.
N. and Q., 7th ser., IV. 537.

water-lot (wâ'tėr-lot), n. A lot of ground which is under water; specifically, one of a regular system of city lots which are partly or wholly covered by the water of a bay, lake, or river, and may be filled in and converted into made ground for the erection of buildings, docks, etc.

Yesterday, he said, I bought a water-lot; that topsail-schooner lies at anchor there.
J. W. Palmer, The New and the Old, p. 244.

water-lotus (wâ'tėr-lō″tus), n. The nelumbo. See lotus, 1.

water-lung (wâ'tėr-lung), n. One of the respiratory trees or ramifications of the cloaca of holothurians. They are present in most of the order Holothuroidea, and have an excretory or depuratory function by the continual passage of water through them.

water-lute (wâ'tėr-lūt), n Any form of air-tight joint formed by the agency of water; a water-seal or air-trap.

water-main (wâ'tėr-mān), n. In water-works, any one of the principal pipes or conduits running under streets, to which the lateral service-pipes for supply of houses on either side of the street are connected.

water-maize (wâ'tėr-māz), n. See maize.

waterman (wâ'tėr-man), n.; pl. watermen (-men). [< water + man (= D. waterman = G. wassermann).] 1. A boatman; a ferryman; a man who manages water-craft; one who plies for hire on rivers, etc.

It does not become your gravity . . . to have offered this outrage on a waterman, . . . much less on a man of his civil coat. B. Jonson, Epicœne, iii. 2.

My great grandfather was but a waterman, looking one way and rowing another. Bunyan, Pilgrim's Progress, i.

2. One who carries or distributes water; specifically, a person who waits at a cab-stand for the purpose of supplying the horses with water, calling the cabmen when they are absent, etc. [Eng.] — Waterman's knot (naut.), a form of knot used to bend a rope about a post or bollard.

Waterman's Knot.

watermanship (wâ'tėr-man-ship), n. The functions, art, or skill of a waterman or oarsman; oarsmanship.

All the rowing interest of each society makes sport for itself and amusement for spectators on the banks with forms of watermanship which are lighter and more pleasant. The Atlantic, LXVII. 792.

water-mantle (wâ'tėr-man″tl), n. [Tr. of G. wassermantel.] The water-jacket, or layer of water, which incloses the space in which the cultures are placed in the incubator for bacteriological investigations, and to which heat is applied, and into which is dipped the regulator that serves to keep the temperature constant. [Rare.]

Between the room . . . and the water-mantle . . . a Schloesing's membrane-regulator . . . is extended.
Hueppe, Bacteriological Investigations (trans.), p. 189.

water-maple (wâ'tėr-mā″pl), n. Same as red maple (which see, under maple[1]).

water-marigold (wâ'tėr-mar″i-gōld), n. An American aquatic, Bidens Beckii, of which most of the leaves are submerged and very finely dissected.

water-mark (wâ'tėr-märk), n. 1. The mark, line, or limit of the rise or height of water, as in a well, a river, the sea, etc.; a water-line; especially, a tide-mark.

The last tide had risen considerably above the usual water-mark. Scott, Antiquary, vii.

2. A faintly marked letter, figure, or design in the fabric of paper, that denotes its size or its manufacturer, usually barely noticeable except when the sheet is held against strong light. It is made in the process of manufacture by the pressure of wires on the moist pulp. The water-marks used by the earlier paper-makers have given names to several of the present standard sizes of paper, as pot, foolscap, crown, elephant, and post, the last being so called from the device of a postman's horn as water-mark.

water-mark (wâ'tėr-märk), v. t. 1. To mark or stamp with water-lines: as, to water-mark paper; a water-marked page. — 2. To mark, inscribe, or embody in water-lines.

They are without the final refinement of the recurring title water-marked in the lower margins of the page.
The Century, XXXIX. 94.

water-meadow (wâ'tėr-med″ō), n. A meadow capable of being kept in a state of fertility by being overflowed with water at certain seasons from some adjoining stream.

The fire-flies flitted over the water-meadows outside.
Fortnightly Rev., N. S., XLIII. 690.

water-measure† (wâ'tėr-mezh″ūr), n. A unit of measure used on board ships, five pecks according to a statute of Henry VII. It was regarded as a bushel, and was similarly subdivided. A statute of 1701 declares that a water-measure is round, and 18½ inches in diameter within the hoop, and 8 inches deep, and ordains that apples and pears shall be sold by this measure heaped.

water-measurer (wâ'tėr-mezh″ūr-ėr), n. Any water-bug of the heteropterous family Hydrometridæ.

watermelon (wâ'tėr-mel″on), n. A plant, Citrullus Citrullus (sometimes named Cucumis Citrullus), or its fruit. The plant, supposed to be of Asiatic origin, is a slender trailing vine, requiring a warm soil. The fruit (a pepo) is of a spherical or usually elongated form, 1½ or 2 feet long, smooth and green, or sometimes variegated on the outside, containing within a rose-colored or sometimes yellowish pulp, pleasantly flavored, and abounding in a refreshing sweetish watery juice. The watermelon is largely cultivated in Egypt, India, China, Japan, America, southern France, and elsewhere.

Their Watermelons were much more large, and of several kinds, distinguished by the color of their meat and seed. . . . They are excellently good, and very pleasant to the taste, as also to the eye; having the rind of a lively green color, streaked and watered, the meat of a carnation, and the seed black and shining while it lies in the melon. Beverley, Hist. Virginia, iv. ¶ 19.

water-meter (wâ'tėr-mē″tėr), n. 1. An instrument that measures the quantity of water that passes through it, as a gas-meter measures gas. There are various contrivances for this purpose. See cuts on following page. — 2. An instrument for determining the amount of water evaporated in a given time, as from a steam-boiler.

Water-meters.

A. a, case; b, b', inlet and outlet; c, hard rubber rotating piston; d, gyrating spindle which drives the registering mechanism e, by means of a connection (not shown); f, dial.

B. a, a', case, composed of two cylinders cast integrally; b, one of the two plungers; c, valve actuated by b, controlling the flow into and out of the cylinder a. A similar valve in a controls the flow into and out of a', and in this way the plunger in each cylinder governs the flow into and out of the other. The plungers are hollow, and have very nearly the specific gravity of water. Their reciprocations, through a connection (not shown), drive the registering mechanism d. The inlet (not shown) is opposite the outlet e.

water-milfoil (wâ'tėr-mil″foil), n. See milfoil.

water-mill (wâ'tėr-mil), n. A mill whose machinery is driven by water.

There are in this Citie 200. Schooles, 200. Innes, 400. water-miles, 600. water-Conduits, 700. Temples and Oratories.
Capt. John Smith, Works, I. 47.

water-mint (wâ'tėr-mint), n. The bergamot-mint, Mentha aquatica, an herb of wet places in Europe and Asiatic Russia, naturalized in other localities, growing sparingly in the eastern United States. It affords a perfumers' oil. The water-mint or brook-mint of early usage was M. sylvestris. See mint[2].

Those which perfume the air most delightfully, not passed by as the rest, but being trodden upon and crushed, are three — that is, burnet, wild thyme, and water-mints.
Bacon, Gardens (ed. 1887), p. 444.

water-mite (wâ'tėr-mīt), n. Any mite of the family Hydrachnidæ; a water-tick. See Hydrachnidæ, and cut under Hydrachna. Also called water-spider.

water-moccasin (wâ'tėr-mok″a-sin), n. A water-adder: a name applied with little discrimination in the United States to several species of aquatic snakes; properly, the venomous Toxicophis or Ancistrodon piscivorus, with which the harmless Tropidonotus (or Nerodia) sipedon is sometimes confounded. See water-snake, and cut under moccasin.

water-mole (wâ'tėr-mōl), n. 1. A desman; a member of the genus Myogale. See cut under desman. — 2. The duck-mole, or duck-billed platypus, Ornithorhynchus paradoxus. See cut under duckbill.

water-monitor (wâ'tėr-mon″i-tor), n. A large water-lizard of the family Monitoridæ or Varanidæ; any aquatic monitor, or varan. One of the best-known is the Indian kabaragoya, or two-handed monitor, Monitor or Varanus salvator, attaining a length of 5 or 6 feet. See cut under Hydrosaurus.

water-monkey (wâ'tėr-mung″ki), n. A globular vessel with a straight upright neck, commonly of earthenware, used in tropical countries for holding water.

water-moss (wâ'tėr-môs), n. A moss of the genus Fontinalis (which see).

water-moth (wâ'tėr-môth), n. A caddis-fly: so called from its aquatic habits and resemblance to a moth. See cut under caddis-worm.

Every . . . lover of the "gentle art" knows the value of the . . . water-moth as bait. Riley, 5th Mo. Ent. Rep., p. 16.

water-motor (wâ'tėr-mō″tor), n. Any form of motor-apparatus that utilizes the kinetic energy, pressure, or weight of water as a moving power; specifically, a small motor using water under pressure, and serving to drive light machinery, such as printing-presses and sewing-machines. Such motors are made in the form of overshot wheels inclosed in a casing, reciprocating pistons in cylinders, and rotary engines. Another form is a small turbine designed to be fitted to a common house supply-pipe. Small engines with oscillating cylinders are also a, case supported on legs; b, gate-valve for regulating flow; c, buckets or floats attached to the outer margin of a disk keyed to the shaft of the band-wheel f. The buckets c play in an annular enlargement e of the case as they receive the impact of the stream flowing through b. The water is discharged at d.

used. Another form, employing the pressure of a large body of water to raise a smaller quantity, is called a water-pressure pump, but is essentially a water-motor used as a pump.

water-mouse (wâ'tėr-mous), n. An Australian murine rodent of the genus Hydromys and subfamily Hydromyinæ. See cut under beaver-rat. — White-bellied water-mouse. See white-bellied. — Yellow-bellied water-mouse. See yellow-bellied.

water-murrain (wâ'tėr-mur″ān), n. A disease among cattle.

water-net (wâ'tėr-net), n. See Hydrodictyon.

water-newt (wâ'tėr-nūt), n. An aquatic newt; a triton. See cuts under newt and axolotl.

water-nixy (wâ'tėr-nik″si), n. [After G. wassernixe; < water + nix[1].] A water-spirit; an elf inhabiting the water.

The shallowness of a waternixie's soul may have a charm until she becomes didactic.
George Eliot, Middlemarch, lxiv.

water-nut (wâ'tėr-nut), n. The large edible seed of plants of the genus Trapa, or the plant itself: also called Singhara nut. See cut under Trapa.

★water-nymph (wâ'tėr-nimf), n. 1. A Naiad. — 2. A plant of the genus Naias. — 3. The water-lily, Castalia.

★water-oak (wâ'tėr-ōk), n. 1. In bot., an oak, Quercus nigra, of the southern United States, most common and best developed along streams in the eastern Gulf States. Its wood is heavy, hard, and coarse-grained, and does not appear to be used except for fuel. Also duck-, possum-, or punk-oak. — 2. Same as pin-oak.

water-oats (wâ'tėr-ōts), n. pl. See Indian rice (a), under rice[1].

water-opossum (wâ'tėr-ō-pos″um), n. The South American yapok. See cut under yapok.

water-ordeal (wâ'ter-ôr″dē-al), n. See ordeal, 1.

water-organ (wâ'tėr-ôr″gan), n. See hydraulic organ, under organ[1].

water-ouzel (wâ'tėr-ö″zl), n. See ouzel.

water-oven (wâ'tėr-uv″n), n. In chem., an oven surrounded on all sides but the front or top with a chamber of boiling water or steam, used for drying chemical preparations, etc.

water-ox (wâ'tėr-oks), n.; pl. water-oxen (-oks″n). The water-cow.

Water-oxen turned up their noses at us.
Littell's Living Age, CLXI. 88.

water-padda (wâ'tėr-pad″ä), n. A South African toad, Breviceps gibbosus.

water-pang (wâ'tėr-pang), n. Pyrosis.

water-parsley (wâ'tėr-pärs″li), n. 1. One of several water-loving umbelliferous plants. [Eng.] — 2. See Richardsonia.

water-parsnip (wâ'tėr-pärs″nip), n. A plant of the genus Sium, especially S. latifolium. See cut under skirret.

water-parting (wâ'tėr-pär″ting), n. The boundary between two river-basins; a watershed.

The high land which forms the divisional line between two contiguous river-basins is called the water-parting. Instead of water-parting some writers employ the term watershed. Huxley, Physiography, p. 18.

water-partridge (wâ'tėr-pär″trij), n. The ruddy duck, Erismatura rubida. G. Trumbull, 1888. See cut under Erismatura. [Patuxent river, Maryland.]

water-passage (wâ'tėr-pas″āj), n. A passage for water; specifically, the urethra.

water-pennywort (wâ'tėr-pen″i-wėrt), n. Same as marsh-pennywort.

water-pepper (wâ'tėr-pep″ėr), n. 1. The smartweed, Polygonum Hydropiper. The mild water-pepper is P. hydropiperoides. — 2. Same as waterwort, 1.

water-persicaria (wâ'tėr-pėr-si-kā″ri-ä), n. See persicaria.

water-pewit (wâ'tėr-pē″wit), n. See pewit (c) and Sayornis.

water-pheasant (wâ'tėr-fez″ant), n. 1. The Chinese jacana, Hydrophasianus chirurgus. See cut under Hydrophasianus. — 2. The pintail or a congeneric duck, having a long tail. See pheasant (d) (5), and cut under Dafila. — 3. The goosander, Mergus merganser; also, the hooded merganser, Lophodytes cucullatus.

waterphone (wâ'tėr-fōn), n. [Irreg. < water + Gr. φωνή, voice, sound, simulating telephone.] An instrument for observing the flow of water in pipes and the detection of leaks, when the pipes are laid underground or in other inaccessible places. A common form consists of a metallic diaphragm arranged in an ear-trumpet after a manner analogous to a telephone receiver, and having a slender rod of steel connected with the diaphragm in such a way as not to touch the trumpet. In use the free end of the rod is placed upon the pipe to be examined, and the ear, placed at the trumpet, is thus enabled to hear distinctly sounds that, without this device, would be entirely inaudible.

water-piet (wâ'tėr-pī″et), n. The water-ouzel or dipper, Cinclus aquaticus. Also water-pyet. See cut under dipper. Montagu. [Prov. Eng.]

water-pig (wâ'tėr-pig), n. 1. A porpoise. — 2. The capibara (which see, with cut). — 3. A fish, the gourami.

water-pillar (wâ'tėr-pil″ar), n. 1†. A waterspout. — 2. On a railroad, an upright pipe with a swinging hollow arm or gooseneck, placed beside the track for supplying water to locomotives; a water-crane.

water-pimpernel (wâ'tėr-pim″pėr-nel), n. See pimpernel.

water-pine (wâ'tėr-pīn), n. See pine[1].

water-pipe (wâ'tėr-pīp), n. [< ME. water-pipe; ★< water + pipe.] 1. A pipe for conveying water. Wright, Vocabulary.

Single I grew, like some green plant, whose root Creeps to the garden water-pipes beneath, Feeding the flower. Tennyson, Fair Women.

2. A waterspout. [Archaic.]

One deep calleth another, because of the noise of the water-pipes. Book of Common Prayer, Psalter, Ps. xlii. 9.

water-pipit (wâ'tėr-pip″it), n. One of several species of Anthus which are common in various parts of Europe, especially that usually called A. aquaticus, also A. spinoletta, and more correctly A. spipoletta. See Anthus and pipit.

waterpit†, n. [ME. waterput, < AS. wæterpyt; as water + pit[1].] A pit of water. Trevisa, III. 401.

water-pitcher (wâ'tėr-pich″ėr), n. 1. A pitcher for holding water. — 2. A plant of the family Sarraceniaceæ, including the common pitcher-plant or sidesaddle-flower. See cut under pitcher-plant.

water-plane (wâ'tėr-plān), n. In naval architecture, a plane passing through a vessel parallel to the surface of the water. When the vessel has her equipments only on board, such a plane is a light water-plane; when she is loaded, it is a load water-plane. Compare water-line.

water-plant (wâ'tėr-plant), n. A plant which grows in water; an aquatic plant.

water-plantain (wâ'tėr-plan″tān), n. A plant of the genus Alisma, chiefly A. Plantago-aquatica, the common or great water-plantain, growing in shallow water throughout the temperate northern hemisphere, reappearing in Australia. Its leaves in form and arrangement suggest those of the common plantain, but are not ridgy; the flowers are small and white-petaled, borne in an open panicle a foot or two long. The related Echinodorus ranunculoides and Elisma natans are also so named.

water-plate (wâ'tėr-plāt), n. A plate having a double bottom or a lining of different material, with a space left in which hot water can be put, to keep articles of food warm.

This kind of dish [sentiment], above all, requires to be served up hot or sent off in water-plates, that your friend may have it almost as warm as yourself.
Lamb, Distant Correspondents.

water-platter (wâ'tėr-plat″ėr), n. The royal water-lily, Victoria Amazonica: so named with reference to its broad floating leaves with upturned margin.

water-plow (wâ'tėr-plou), n. A machine formerly used for taking mud, etc., out of rivers. Halliwell.

water-poise (wâ'tėr-poiz), n. A hydrometer, or instrument for ascertaining the specific gravity of different liquids.

water-pore (wâ'tėr-pōr), n. 1. In zoöl., the pore or orifice by which a water-tube of any water-vascular system opens to the exterior. — 2. In bot., an aperture or pore in the epidermis of certain plants, through which water is frequently expressed. It resembles an ordinary stoma, but its guard-cells are immovable, and it is situated directly over the end of a fibrovascular bundle. These apertures are of various size and form. Also water-stoma.

water-post (wâ'tėr-pōst), n. A post (often a lamp-post) to which a pressure-gage is affixed, the gage being connected with the main and supply branches of a water-pipe, and serving to indicate the water-pressure in some part of a system of water-supply.

water-pot (wâ'tėr-pot), n. [< ME. water-pot, water-pott, watir-pot; < water + *pot*1.] 1. Any pot or vessel for holding, conveying, or distributing water.

Therefor the womman lefte the watir pott and went into the citie. Wyclif, John iv. 28.

2. Same as watering-pot, 1.

To use his eyes for garden water-pots,
Ay, and laying autumn's dust.
Shak., Lear, iv. 6. 200.

3. A chamber-pot.

water-pouke†, n. [< water + pouke, a pimple or blister, a little pouch or poke holding water; cf. *poke*2, pouch.] Same as vesicle, 1 (b).

water-power (wâ'tėr-pou″ėr), n. The power of water employed, or capable of being employed, as a prime mover in machinery; hence, a fall or descent in a stream capable of being utilized for mechanical purposes.

The water-power to which a riparian owner is entitled consists of the fall in the stream when in its natural state, as it passes through his land, or along the boundaries of it. Or, in other words, it consists of the difference of level between the surface where the stream first touches his land and the surface where it leaves it.
Gibson, C. J., 3 Rawle (Penn.), p. 90.

Absorbent-strata water-power. See absorbent.

water-pox (wâ'tėr-poks), n. Varicella or chicken-pox.

water-press (wâ'tėr-pres), n. Same as hydrostatic or hydraulic press. See hydraulic. E. H. Knight.

water-prism (wâ'tėr-prizm), n. In a canal or river, the body of water at any part of its course as determined by the cross-section at that part, regarded as a cross-section of a prism.

The Yazoo river, by measurements, returned 129,000 cubic feet per second at the date of highest water at Vicksburg (June 27) to the water-prism.
Gov. Report on Mississippi River, 1861 (rep. 1876), p. 80.

water-privilege (wâ'tėr-priv″i-lej), n. 1. The right to use water; especially, the right to use running water to turn machinery. See water-power.—2. A stream or body of water capable of being utilized in driving machinery. [U. S.]

waterproof (wâ'tėr-prōf), a. and n. [Also water-proof; < water + proof, a.] I. a. Impervious to water, or nearly so.—Waterproof glue. See glue.

II. n. 1. Any material which repels water; especially, a light woolen cloth made for the purpose, and subjected to some waterproofing application.—2. A garment of some material that repels water, made either of waterproof (1), or of mackintosh or a similar material made with india-rubber.

"There is going to be rain, Sheila," her father said, smelling the moisture in the keen air. "Will you hef your waterproof?" W. Black, Princess of Thule, xxvi.

Just as we reached it the mist turned to heavy rain. This is the depressing side of sight-seeing in Scotland; you must take your holidays in water-proofs.
Harper's Mag., LXXVII. 945.

waterproof (wâ'tėr-prōf), v. t. [< waterproof, a.] To render impervious to water, as cloth, leather, etc.

Thirty yards of waterproofed and polished fly-line of braided silk. The Century, XXVI. 378.

waterproofer (wâ'tėr-prō″fėr), n. One who renders materials waterproof.

Waterproofers and lamp-black makers.
Lancet, 1890, I. 420.

waterproofing (wâ'tėr-prō″fing), n. [Verbal n. of waterproof, v.] 1. The process or method of rendering impervious to water, as clothing, boots and shoes, and fishing-lines.

The final combination of dubbing, whitening, waterproofing, etc., it is claimed, gives the leather a superior finish. C. T. Davis, Leather, p. 505.

2. The material with which a substance is made waterproof, as caoutchouc, a varnish, or an oil.

As umbrellas were not used by men, as being too effeminate, and india-rubber waterproofing was only to be discovered more than a century later, men in Anne's reign had to put their trust in good broadcloth cloaks.
J. Ashton, Social Life in Reign of Queen Anne, I. 159.

water-propeller (wâ'tėr-prō-pel″ėr), n. A rotary pump. E. H. Knight.

water-pump (wâ'tėr-pump), n. A pump for water: used humorously of the eyes.

"Thank you, Dobbin," he said, rubbing his eyes with his knuckles. . . . The water-pumps were at work again, and I am not sure that the soft-hearted Captain's eyes did not also twinkle. Thackeray, Vanity Fair, xxiv.

water-puppy (wâ'tėr-pup″i), n. Same as water-dog, 2.

water-purpie (wâ'tėr-pėr″pi), n. [< water + purpie, a Sc. corruption of purple.] A species of Veronica, V. Beccabunga, found in moist places; brook-lime. [Scotch.]

Cresses or water-purpie, and a bit ait-cake, can serve the Master for breakfast as weel as Caleb.
Scott, Bride of Lammermoor, xviii.

water-purslane (wâ'tėr-pėrs″lān), n. See purslane.

water-pyet, n. See water-piet.

water-quake† (wâ'tėr-kwāk), n. A violent disturbance of water. [Rare.]

Wittlesmere . . . doth sometimes in Calmes and faire weather sodainly rise tempestuously, as it were, into violent water-quakes, to the danger of the poore fishermen.
Holland, tr. of Camden, p. 500. (Davies.)

water-qualm (wâ'tėr-kwäm), n. Pyrosis.

water-quenched (wâ'tėr-kwencht), a. Cooled by immersion in water: a term frequently used in speaking of tempering steel and similar operations.

water-quintain (wâ'tėr-kwin″tān), n. The sport of tilting at the quintain by a person standing in a boat, which was rowed rapidly past. If the tilter was not sufficiently alert, the return of the quintain threw him into the water.

water-rabbit (wâ'tėr-rab″it), n. The swamp-hare of the lower Mississippi valley, Lepus aquaticus. See cut under swamp-hare.

water-radish (wâ'tėr-rad″ish), n. A tall water-cress, Roripa amphibia, of wet places in the northern old world. Other species of Roripa are also so named. Also radish.

water-rail (wâ'tėr-rāl), n. 1. The common rail of Europe, Rallus aquaticus, as distinguished from land-rail, Crex pratensis; any species of Rallus.—2. The European gallinule, Gallinula chloropus, the water-hen or moor-hen. [Local, Eng.]

water-ram (wâ'tėr-ram), n. A machine for raising water: same as hydraulic ram (which see, under hydraulic).

water-ranny (wâ'tėr-ran″i), n. 1†. The short-tailed field-mouse. Halliwell.—2. Properly, the water-shrew.

water-rat (wâ'tėr-rat), n. One of several different rodents, of aquatic habits, belonging to the family Muridæ. (a) In Europe, the water-vole, a comparatively large blackish species, Arvicola amphibius, which lives in the banks of streams or lakes. See *vole*2. (b) In America, the musquash or muskrat, Fiber zibethicus. See cut under muskrat. (c) In Australia and Tasmania, a water-mouse; any species of the genus Hydromys, as H. chrysogaster or H. leucogaster: also called beaver-rat. See cut under beaver-rat.

Water-rat (Arvicola amphibius).

water-rate (wâ'tėr-rāt), n. A rate or tax for the supply of water. Also water-rent.

water-rattler (wâ'tėr-rat″lėr), n. The diamond rattlesnake, Crotalus adamanteus, often found in moist places. Also water-rattle. [Local, U. S.]

water-reed (wâ'tėr-rēd), n. A grass of the genus Arundo.

water-rent (wâ'tėr-rent), n. Same as water-rate.

water-ret (wâ'tėr-ret), v. t. Same as water-rot.

water-retting (wâ'tėr-ret″ing), n. See retting, 1. Encyc. Brit., IX. 294.

water-rice (wâ'tėr-rīs), n. The Indian rice, Zizania aquatica. See rice, and cut under Zizania.

water-robin (wâ'tėr-rob″in), n. An Asiatic fly-catcher, Xanthopygia fuliginosa. See *robin*1, 3, and cut under Xanthopygia.

water-rocket (wâ'tėr-rok″et), n. 1. A plant of the genus Roripa; water-cress.—2. A kind of firework designed to be discharged in the water.

water-room (wâ'tėr-röm), n. The space in a steam-boiler occupied by water, as distinct from the steam-room, or the space which contains steam.

water-rose (wâ'tėr-rōz), n. The water-lily.

water-rot (wâ'tėr-rot), v. t. To cause to rot by steeping in water, as in some of the mechanical trades. Also water-ret.

water-route (wâ'tėr-röt), n. A stream or other tract of water used as a route of travel.

The competition of parallel railroad lines or water-routes. Pop. Sci. Mo., XXVIII. 586.

water-rug† (wâ'tėr-rug), n. [< water + *rug*1, equiv. here to *shock*3, shough.] A kind of dog.

Hounds and greyhounds, mongrels, spaniels, curs,
Shoughs, water-rugs, and demi-wolves are clept
All by the name of dogs. Shak., Macbeth, iii. 1. 94.

water-sail (wâ'tėr-sāl), n. A small sail occasionally set under a lower studdingsail.

water-salamander (wâ'tėr-sal″a-man-dėr), n. A water-newt.

water-sallow (wâ'tėr-sal″ō), n. [< water + *sallow*2.] Same as water-willow, 1.

water-sapphire (wâ'tėr-saf″īr), n. A precious stone of an intense blue color and transparent, found in small rolled masses in Ceylon. It is a variety of iolite.

waterscape (wâ'tėr-skāp), n. [< water + -scape, as in landscape.] A water- or sea-view as distinguished from a landscape; a seascape. [Rare.]

water-scorpion (wâ'tėr-skôr″pi-on), n. A large aquatic and carnivorous bug of the family Nepidæ. See Nepa.

water-screw (wâ'tėr-skrö), n. A water-elevator consisting of an application of the Archimedean screw. It has spiral vanes set on an inclined axis revolving within a cylindrical casing whose lower end is in the water.

water-seal (wâ'tėr-sēl), n. A body of water interposed as a bar to the passage or escape of gas. A common way of forming a water-seal is to insert the open mouth of a pipe or vessel designed to hold the gas below the surface of water in another vessel to a depth at which the hydraulic pressure opposing the escape of the gas is equal to or greater than the pneumatic pressure of the gas. Another method is to form a bend downward in a pipe, and fill the bent part with water. Compare *trap*1, 4.

water-sengreen (wâ'tėr-sen″grēn), n. See sengreen.

water-serpent (wâ'tėr-sėr″pent), n. Same as ★sea-serpent, 2.

watershed (wâ'tėr-shed), n. [< water + *shed*1.] 1. The edge of a river-basin (see river); the line separating the waters flowing into two different rivers or river-basins. Thus, the crest of the Sierra Nevada of California forms the watershed between the rivers flowing into the Pacific and those which lose themselves in the Great Basin. Sometimes called the water-parting, and in the United States more frequently and popularly the divide. Thus, the "Continental Divide" is the line which marks the separation of the waters flowing into the Pacific from those finding their way to the Gulf of Mexico.

Midnight! the outpost of advancing day! . . .
The watershed of Time, from which the streams
Of Yesterday and To-morrow take their way!
Longfellow, The Two Rivers, i.

The summit of the pass is called the divide or watershed. In this last word the "shed" has not the present meaning, but an obsolescent one of "part" or "divide" (Ger. Scheiden). Skeat says: "The old sense 'to part' is nearly obsolete, except in water-shed, the ridge which parts river-systems." . . . The water-shed of any river basin limits its "area of catchment," as the hydraulic engineers call it. J. D. Whitney, Names and Places, p. 141.

2. The surface drained by a river; an area of catchment. [Incorrect.]

water-sheep† (wâ'tėr-shēp), n. The roach, a fish: so called in antithesis to water-fox (the carp). See cut under roach. I. Walton.

water-shell (wâ'tėr-shel), n. In ordnance, a shell consisting of an ordinary shell with a centrally placed cylinder of guncotton, having the space between this cylinder and the walls of the shell filled with water.

water-shield (wâ'tėr-shēld), n. A plant of either of the genera Cabomba and Brasenia, which form the subfamily Cabombeæ, of the Nymphæaceæ: so called as consisting of aquatics with peltate leaves. Brasenia Schreberi, with floating oval leaves 1 to 4 inches across and small dull-purple flowers, is found in North America, Asia, Africa, and Australia. Also water-buckler.

water-shoot (wâ'tėr-shöt), n. [< water + shoot, prob. confused also with chute.] 1. A pipe or trough for discharging water from a building.—2. A shoot from the root of a tree.

water-shrew (wâ'tėr-shrö), n. An oar-footed aquatic shrew. In Europe the best-known species is Crossopus fodiens. The corresponding American species is Neosorex palustris. See second cut under shrew.

water-shut† (wâ'tėr-shut), n. That which stops the passage of water.

Who all the morne
Had from the quarry with his pick-axe torne
A large well-squared stone, which he would cut
To serve his stile, or for some water-shut.
W. Browne, Britannia's Pastorals. (Nares.)

waterside (wâ'tėr-sīd), n. The brink of water; the bank or margin of a river, stream, or lake; the sea-shore: sometimes used attributively.

Come, Master Belch, I will bring you to the water-side, perhaps to Wapping, and there I'll leave you.
Dekker and Webster, Northward Ho, ii. 1.

Water-side insects are well described, particularly the ephemeridæ. The Academy, April 25, 1891, p. 392.

water-silvering (wâ'tėr-sil″vėr-ing), n. A process of silvering analogous to water-gilding.

water-sink (wâ'tėr-singk), n. See pot-hole.

water-skin (wâ″tėr-skin), n. A vessel or bag of skin used for the storage or transportation of water.

We had water, it is true, from the Nile; but we never thought we could have too much, as long as there was room in our water-skins to hold more.
Bruce, Source of the Nile, I. 177.

water-skipper (wâ'tėr-skip″ėr), n. One of the slender long-legged water-bugs of the genus Hygrotrechus; any water-strider.

water-sky (wâ'tėr-skī), n. A peculiar appearance of the distant sky near the horizon, common in arctic regions, indicating the presence of open water beneath as distinguished from ice or land.

Some circumstances which he reports seem to point to the existence of a north water all the year round; and the frequent water-skies, fogs, &c., that we have seen to the southwest during the winter go to confirm the fact.
Kane, Sec. Grinnell Exp., I. 236.

water-slater (wâ'tėr-slā″tėr), n. Any aquatic isopod or slater of the genus Asellus.

water-smartweed, n. See smartweed.

water-smoke (wâ'tėr-smōk), n. Light clouds of mist formed over wet surfaces of glaciers, floes, warm currents, ravines, forests, mountains, lakes, or rivers, and apparently rising directly from them like smoke from a fire. A phenomenon that occurs when the temperature of water-surfaces is above the dew-point of the air, and the air is already saturated with moisture. Water-smoke is frequently observed over rivers or other bodies of water after a sudden fall of temperature, when, in popular language, it is said "the river steams," and in damp weather over water-covered surfaces which are much warmer than the air, and is also seen frequently in arctic regions. Kane, Sec. Grinnell Exp., II. 32.

water-snail (wâ'tėr-snāl), n. 1. An aquatic pulmonate gastropod; a pond-snail, as a limneid, or one of many similar snails. See cuts under Limnæa and Limnæidæ.—2. The Archimedean screw. [Rare.]

water-snake (wâ'tėr-snāk), n. A snake which frequents the water: variously applied.

In the Friendly Islands the water-snake was much respected. Sir J. Lubbock, Orig. of Civilisation, p. 179.

Especially—(a) Any one of the venomous sea-snakes. See Hydrophidæ and sea-serpent, 2, with cuts there or there cited. (b) The Indian Fordonia unicolor, or any member of the family Homalopsidæ. (c) A wart-snake; any member of the Acrochordidæ, as species of Acrochordus and Chersydrus. See cut under wart-snake. (d) The common ringed snake of Europe, Tropidonotus natrix. See cuts under snake and Tropidonotus. (e) In the United States, one of several harmless aquatic colubrines, as the species of Nerodia (or Tropidonotus) and Regina, as N. sipedon and R. leberis. In the West several species of garter-snakes (Eutænia) are thoroughly aquatic, and would come locally under this name. See water-adder and water-moccasin.

water-soak (wâ'tėr-sōk), v. t. To soak or fill the interstices of with water.

water-socks (wâ'tėr-soks), n. pl. The white water-lily, Castalia alba. Britten and Holland.

water-sodden (wâ'tėr-sod″n), a. [< water + sodden, pp. of seethe.] Soaked and softened in water; water-soaked. Tennyson.

water-soldier (wâ'tėr-sōl″jėr), n. The water-sengreen, Stratiotes aloides. Also called water-aloe.

water-sorrel (wâ'tėr-sor″el), n. Same as water-dock.

water-souchy (wâ'tėr-sou″chi), n. Fish boiled and served in its own liquor. See zoutch, v. t.

water-space (wâ'tėr-spās), n. That part of a steam-boiler which lies below the steam-space, and is designed to hold the water to be evaporated.

water-spaniel (wâ'tėr-span″yel), n. The name given to two varieties of the dog called spaniel, namely, the large water-spaniel and the small water-spaniel. See spaniel, 1.

water-sparrow (wâ'tėr-spar″ō), n. 1. The reed-bunting or reed-sparrow, Emberiza schœniclus. [Prov. Eng.]—2. A reed- or sedge-warbler of the genus Acrocephalus, as A. streperus or A. phragmitis. [Prov. Eng.]

water-speedwell (wâ'tėr-spēd″wel), n. See speedwell.

water-spider (wâ'tėr-spī″dėr), n. 1. A spider of the family Drassidæ, Argyroneta aquatica, which makes a bag of silk on water-plants, and lives in it under water as in a diving-bell, the opening being below, so that the air cannot escape. It is filled by the spider, which brings down bubbles of air one at a time. See diving-spider, and cut under Argyroneta.—2. Any one of certain spiders of the lycosid genus Dolomedes, as D. tenebrosus, D. urinator, or D. sexpunctatus, which build nests of leaves and twigs on overhanging rushes, just at the surface of the water in shallow streams; a raft-spider. The spiders construct their cocoons and live in these nests. They run rapidly over and dive beneath the surface of the water, where they can remain for some time.
3. A water-mite or water-tick.—4. A bug of the genus Hydrometra; a water-measurer. Encyc. Dict.

water-spike (wâ'tėr-spīk), n. A plant of the genus Potamogeton, which consists of aquatics with small greenish or reddish flowers in spikes or heads; pondweed.

water-spinner (wâ'tėr-spin″ėr), n. A water-spider; especially, the diving spider.

waterspout (wâ'tėr-spout), n. 1. A pipe, nozle, or orifice from which water is spouted.

The manner in which he gazed at the shops, stumbled into the gutters, ran against the porters, and stood under the waterspouts, marked him out as an excellent subject for the operations of swindlers and banterers.
Macaulay, Hist. Eng., iii.

Every dozen or fifteen miles is a station—two or three sheds, and a water-spout and woodpile.
S. Bowles, Our New West, p. 50.

2. A spout, jet, or column of water; in meteor., the appearance of a solid column of water extending from the surface to the clouds. In reality, however, the phenomenon that is seen is a slender cloud formed in the axis of a rapidly gyrating mass of ascending air. The axis may be inclined and curved, but more often is nearly vertical. The cloud consists simply of fine mist surrounding a central axis of rarefaction. At first the cloud has the form of a tapering funnel; but as the gyration is communicated to the lower air and eventually to the surface of the ocean or lake, the latter is torn into spray that is drawn up into the axis. The spout is then complete, and appears as an immense column connecting sea and cloud, light in color near the center, but dark along the sides. Like other whirlwinds, the waterspout has a progressive as well as a rotary motion, its axis sometimes being inclined forward in the direction of advance. After continuing a short time, generally less than twenty minutes, the column is disunited, the lower part descending as rain, while the upper part is drawn back into the clouds. The height of the spout depends upon the hygrometric state of the air; in general it is between 800 and 2,500 feet. It is common for a number of waterspouts to be seen simultaneously or successively. Waterspouts are most frequent in the southern quadrant of a low area or storm region and seem to require mechanically the same conditions as those that produce tornadoes on land.

Deep calleth unto deep at the noise of thy waterspouts: all thy waves and thy billows are gone over me.
Ps. xlii. 7.

water-sprite (wâ'tėr-sprīt), n. A sprite or spirit inhabiting the water.

A speck, a mist, a shape, I wist!
And still it near'd and near'd;
As if it dodged a water-sprite,
It plunged and tack'd and veer'd.
Coleridge, Ancient Mariner, iii.

water-stairs (wâ'tėr-stārz), n. pl. Stairs leading down to water, as on the banks of the Thames, where boats are taken for ferriage, etc.

He has but a tender weake body, but was always very temperate; ——— made him damnable drunke at Somerset-house, where, at the water-stayres, he fell downe, and had a cruel fall. Aubrey, Lives (Edmund Waller).

water-standing (wâ'tėr-stan″ding), a. Wet with water; perpetually filled with tears. [Rare.]

An orphan's water-standing eye.
Shak., 3 Hen. VI., v. 6. 40.

water-star (wâ'tėr-stär), n. Same as star-fruit.

water-stargrass (wâ'tėr-stär″gràs), n. An aquatic herb, Heteranthera dubia, with grass-like leaves and yellow starry flowers.

water-starwort (wâ'tėr-stär″wėrt), n. See Callitriche and star-grass.

waterstead† (wâ'tėr-sted), n. The bed of a river. Admiral Smyth.

water-stream (wâ'tėr-strēm), n. [< ME. waterstraem, < AS. water-streám; as water + stream.] A stream of water; a river.

Forr all all swa se waterrstræm . . . fletehth forth . . . towarrd te sæ. Ormulum (ed. White), l. 18092.

★water-strider (wâ'tėr-strī″dėr), n. Any aquatic heteropterous insect of the family Hydrobatidæ; a water-skipper: so called from their long, slender, straddling legs and aquatic habits.

The water-striders prefer quiet waters, upon which they rest, or over which they skim rapidly.
Comstock, Introd. Entom. (1888), p. 193.

water-supply (wâ'tėr-su-plī″), n. The obtaining of water for and its distribution to a town or city, as far as possible in sufficient quantity and of satisfactory quality; also, the amount of water thus provided and distributed. Water-supply, as this term is generally used, differs from irrigation in that the latter has to do with providing and distributing water for agricultural purposes—that is, it is an attempt to make up for a deficiency of, or for irregularity in, the natural rainfall. Water-supply, on the other hand, is the providing of water for domestic and manufacturing uses in sufficient quantity, and under favorable conditions, not only as to purity, but also as to pressure, so that it may be available without the necessity of carrying it by hand to the upper stories of houses or manufactories, and as to storage, so that large quantities can be used within a short period of time, as when needed for extinguishing extensive conflagrations in cities. The question of water-supply is one which has to do, and to a most important extent, with the health, comfort, and material well-being of all localities, even where there is only a moderately dense aggregation of population; and the larger and denser such aggregation the more important this question becomes. The natural source of water-supply is the rain, and this is one of great importance in regions of considerable rainfall and of thinly aggregated population, the water being caught on the roofs of the houses or barns and conveyed to cisterns where it is stored for use as wanted, and from which it has to be pumped. Almost everywhere in regions of considerable precipitation water can be had by digging shallow wells in the surface detritus, and this is an extremely common mode of supply in agricultural districts, the advantage being that the expense of digging a well is much less than that of providing storage in cisterns, while the disadvantage is that well-water is ordinarily not so pure as rain-water (and this is emphatically the case in limestone districts). Besides, it is almost impossible to provide cisterns large enough to hold the amount of rain-water required during periods of abnormally long drought, such as occasionally occur even in regions of considerable average rainfall. These sources of supply—namely, rain caught as it falls and water from shallow wells—are entirely unsuited to the conditions in towns of even moderate size. The rainfall in cities is contaminated with soot and gases thrown out from the many chimneys of houses and manufacturing establishments; neither is it large enough in quantity, nor can it be stored satisfactorily without incurring an expense far greater than would be that of providing a supply in some other way. Rivers would seem to be the natural source of supply for cities situated upon them, and there are few very large cities through which a river does not run; but rivers are the natural and almost necessary sewers of the cities drained by them, and the water, thus polluted, is not only often disagreeable to the taste, but is always a possible source of danger to health. It is true that some cities of moderate size situated on very large rivers do use their water, as, for instance, St. Louis on the Mississippi; but, in general, if a river is used, the water must be taken from a point high enough up-stream to avoid the risk of contamination from the sewage of the towns situated on or near its banks, as is done in London, which is largely supplied by water from the Thames drawn from a point far above the city. The most satisfactory source of water-supply for a city is a mountain-lake, not too far distant, where the geological and other conditions are such as to insure a high degree of purity in the water. This is emphatically the case with regard to Glasgow, which is supplied from Loch Katrine. Much oftener water satisfactory in quality and abundant in quantity can be obtained by creating one or more artificial lakes at the head of a suitably situated river by the construction of dams; these are sometimes of great height, holding back bodies of water miles in length. Of this character is the water-supply of Liverpool, of New York, of Boston, and of many other important cities. Regions underlain by thick masses of permeable rocks—as, for instance, the New Red Sandstone and Chalk districts of England—are not infrequently supplied with water by means of wells bored to considerable depths and of large dimensions, from which the water sometimes rises to the surface, but more often has to be pumped. Many large towns in the manufacturing districts of England were formerly almost exclusively, and are still to some extent, supplied in this way; but wherever it has been found possible to obtain water in some better way this system has been abandoned, neither quality nor quantity being satisfactory. Considerable water is procured in England from deep wells in the Chalk, and this method of supply is of some importance in London. Where the conditions are such that pure water cannot be had, artificial purification is sometimes resorted to, but this is always expensive and often unsatisfactory. An abundant supply of soft water, taken from some source known to be free from the possibility of contamination by sewage or otherwise, is one of the greatest of blessings, and this result has been attained in various cities, but not without large expenditure and no small amount of engineering skill. The distribution of water was once a matter of considerable difficulty, the wooden pipes first employed being subject to rot and leakage. In modern times the use of cast-iron for the mains is most common, while the service-pipes are usually of lead or galvanized iron, but sometimes of bronze or brass.

water-swallow† (wâ'tėr-swol″ō), n. The water-wagtail. Halliwell.

water-system (wâ'tėr-sis″tem), n. In zoöl., the water-vascular system.

water-tabby (wâ'tėr-tab″i), n. Tabby having a watered surface.

★water-table (wâ'tėr-tā″bl), n. 1. In arch., a string-course, molding, or other projecting member so placed as to throw off water from the wall of a building.

It should not be forgotten what a noble foundation there was for the chapell, wch did runne from the Colledge along the street as far as the Blew Boare Inn; wch was about 7 foot or more high, and adorned with a very rich Gothique water-table.

Aubrey, Lives (Thomas Wolsey).

2. A small embankment made across a road, especially on a hill, to carry off the water. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]—3. Same as water-bridge.

water-tank (wâ'tėr-tangk), n. A tank, cistern, or other receiver for holding water.

The sensitizing bath, plate-holders, water-tanks, etc., all adjusted. Silver Sunbeam, p. 128.

water-tap (wâ'tėr-tap), n. A tap or cock by which water may be drawn from any supply.

water-target (wâ'tėr-tär″get), n. The water-shield, Brasenia purpurea.

water-tath (wâ'tėr-tath), n. A species of coarse grass growing in wet grounds, and supposed to be injurious to sheep. [Prov. Eng.]

water-telescope (wâ'tėr-tel″e-skōp), n. See telescope.

water-thermometer (wâ'tėr-thėr-mom″e-tėr), n. An instrument, in which water is substituted for mercury, for exhibiting the precise degree of temperature at which water attains its maximum density. This is at 39°.2 F. or 4° C., and from that point downward to the freezing-point, 32° F. or 0° C., it expands, and it also expands from the same point upward to the boiling-point, 212° F. or 100° C. See water.

water-thief (wâ'tėr-thēf), n. 1. A pirate. [Rare.]

Water-thieves and land-thieves; I mean pirates.

Shak., M. of V., i. 3. 24.

2. A slender cylindrical tin can, 9 or 10 inches long and from 1½ to 2 inches thick, furnished with a bail, used to draw water from a cask through the bung-hole; a bung-bucket: so called because it is sometimes used by sailors to steal water when on short allowance.

water-thistle (wâ'tėr-this-l), n. The marsh-thistle, Carduus palustris, of the northern Old World. Britten and Holland. [Prov. Eng.]

water-thrush (wâ'tėr-thrush), n. 1. A bird of the genus Seiurus, as S. nævius or S. motacilla, common in the United States, and belonging to the American warblers, or Mniotiltidæ. S. nævius is more fully called New York water-thrush, and S. motacilla the large-billed or Louisiana water-thrush. The name may have originally contrasted with wood-thrush, but this bird belongs to a different family. The nearest relative of these water-thrushes is a woodland species of the same genus, S. auricapillus, the golden-crowned thrush (figured under oven-bird), from which the two species named above differ markedly in inhabiting watery tangles and brakes. Also called water-wagtail. See cut under Seiurus.

2. Any bird of the family Pittidæ; an Old World ant-thrush. See cut under Pittidæ.—3. The water-ouzel, Cinclus aquaticus. [Local, Eng.]—4. Same as water-wagtail, 1. [Local, Eng.]

water-thyme (wâ'tėr-tīm), n. See thyme.

water-tick (wâ'tėr-tik), n. A water-spider of the genus Hydrometra.

water-tiger (wâ'tėr-tī″gėr), n. The larva of any water-beetle of the family Dytiscidæ. See cut under decapodiform.

The larvæ are called water tigers, being long, cylindrical, with large flattened heads, armed with scissor-like jaws with which they seize other insects, or snip off the tails of tadpoles, while they are even known to attack young fishes, sucking their blood.

A. S. Packard, Guide to the Study of Insects, p. 435.

water-tight (wâ'tėr-tīt), a. [= G. wasserdicht; as water + tight[1].] So tight as to resist the passage of water; impenetrable by water.—Water-tight compartment. See compartment, and compare cut under dock.

water-tightness (wâ'tėr-tīt″nes), n. The property of being water-tight. The Engineer, LXIX. 148.

water-torch† (wâ'tėr-tôrch), n. The reed-mace or cattail, Typha latifolia: said to be so named from its fruiting spike being soaked in oil and lighted as a torch. Prior, Pop. Names of Brit. Plants.

★water-tower (wâ'tėr-tou″ėr), n. Same as standpipe, 7.

When the flames are blazing through the upper windows of a tall building . . . the value of what is called a water-tower is apparent. Scribner's Mag., IX. 56.

water-treader (wâ'tėr-tred″ėr), n. One who or that which treads water; hence, by poetical license, a ship.

When the water-treader far away
Had left the land, then plotted they the day
Of my long servitude. Chapman, Odyssey, xiv. 477.

★water-tree (wâ'tėr-trē), n. See Tetracera.—Red water-tree, the sassy-bark. See Erythrophleum.

water-trefoil (wâ'tėr-trē″foil), n. Same as bog-bean, Menyanthes trifoliata.

water-trunk (wâ'tėr-trungk), n. A cistern of planks lined with lead to hold water.

★water-tube (wâ'tėr-tūb), n. 1. A pipe for rain-water.—2. One of a set of tubes which open upon the exterior of various invertebrates, and into which water may enter. They are supposed to have an excretory or a depuratory office analogous to that of kidneys. See water-pore, 1, water-vascular, and compare water-lung.—Water-tube boiler, a form of boiler in which the water circulates through pipes, and the flame wraps about them.

water-tupelo (wâ'tėr-tū″pe-lō), n. The southern tupelo, Nyssa biflora, related to Nyssa sylvatica, the black-gum or pepperidge, having the base of the trunk greatly enlarged or swollen, found in ponds and swamps in the southern United States.

water-turkey (wâ'tėr-tėr″ki), n. 1. The anhinga or snake-bird, Plotus anhinga. See darter, 3 (b) (1), and cut under anhinga. [Southern U. S.]—2. The wood-ibis, Tantalus loculator: more fully called Colorado water-turkey. See wood-ibis, and cut under Tantalus. [Southwestern U. S.]

water-twist (wâ'tėr-twist), n. The trade-name for cotton yarn spun on a water-frame. See water-frame.

water-twyer (wâ'tėr-twī″ėr), n. In metal., a furnace blast-pipe or twyer kept cool (to prevent the burning of the nozle) by means of a stream of water constantly passing through a pipe carried around or beside it.

water-vacuole (wâ'tėr-vak″ū-ōl), n. One of the temporary vacuoles of many protozoans, consisting of a globule of water taken in with a particle of food. The circulation of these food-vacuoles or temporary stomachs represents a water-vascular system of the most primitive kind. See water-vascular.

water-varnish (wâ'tėr-vär″nish), n. A varnish made by using water as a solvent.—Lac water-varnish. See lac[2].

water-vascular (wâ'tėr-vas″kū-lär), a. In biol., pertaining to or providing for circulation of water in the body of an animal. The water-vascular system is seen in its utmost simplicity in infusorians, and in various degrees of complexity in higher invertebrates — in trematode worms, for example. Water-lungs and water-tubes belong to the water-vascular system. See also cuts under Balanoglossus, Proctucha, Rhabdocœla, and Rotifera.

water-vine (wâ'tėr-vīn), n. 1. A plant of the genus Phytocrene.—2. A climbing shrub, Dolicarpus Calinea of the Dilleniaceæ, found in tropical America. [West Indies.]

water-violet (wâ'tėr-vī″ō-let), n. (a) A plant of the genus Hottonia, primarily H. palustris: so called from the likeness of its flowers to those of the stock-gillyflower, once called violet. Britten and Holland. See featherfoil. (b) Sometimes, same as lance-leafed violet (which see, under violet).

water-viper (wâ'tėr-vī″pėr), n. See viper.

water-vole (wâ'tėr-vōl), n. The common water-rat or vole of Europe, Arvicola amphibius. See cut under water-rat.

The sudden dive of a water-vole.

R. D. Blackmore, Lorna Doone, vii.

water-wagtail (wâ'tėr-wag″tāl), n. 1. A wagtail most properly so called; any species of Motacilla in a strict sense, as distinguished from Budytes. In England the name commonly specifies the pied wagtail, Motacilla lugubris. See cut under wagtail.—2. Same as water-thrush, 1.—Gray water-wagtail, yellow water-wagtail†. Same as gray wagtail (which see, under wagtail).

waterway (wâ'tėr-wā), n. [< ME. water-wey, < AS. wæterweg; as water + way[1].] 1. A channel or passage of water; a water-route; specifically, that part of a river, arm of the sea, or the like through which vessels enter or depart; the fairway.

Though the Thames was already a waterway by which London could communicate with the heart of England, no town save Oxford has as yet arisen along its course.

J. R. Green, Conq. of Eng., p. 419.

2. In ship-building, a name given to the thick planks at the outside of the deck, worked over the ends of the beams, and fitting against the inside of the top-timbers, to which, as well as to the ends of the beams, they are bolted, thus forming an important binding. Their inner edge is hollowed out to form a channel for water to run off the deck. In iron vessels the waterway assumes many different forms. See cut under beam, 2 (g).

The spencers we bent on very carefully, . . . and, making tackles fast to the clews, bowsed them down to the water-ways. R. H. Dana, Jr., Before the Mast, p. 258.

The Waterway, as its name would suggest, is a portion of the hull so situated that, in addition to its other functions, it forms a channel for carrying water to the scuppers on each side of the ship. Thearle, Naval Arch., § 209.

water-weak† (wâ'tėr-wēk), a. Weak as water; very feeble or weak.

If merrie now, anone with woe I weepe,
If lustie now, forthwith am water-weak.

Davies, Muse's Sacrifice, p. 10. (Davies.)

water-weed (wâ'tėr-wēd), n. 1. Any wild aquatic plant without special use or beauty.

The willful water-weeds held me thrall.

S. Lanier, The Century, XXVII. 819.

2. Specifically, the choke-pondweed or water-thyme, Philotria Canadensis, of the family Vallisneriaceæ. See choke-pondweed, under pondweed, and Babington's-curse.

water-weevil (wâ'tėr-wē″vl), n. A snout-beetle, Lissorhoptrus simplex, which occurs in great numbers in the Georgia and South Carolina rice-fields, the adult feeding on the leaves of the rice, and the larvæ feeding on the roots under water.

Water-weevil (Lissorhoptrus simplex), eight times natural size.

This beetle has gained its common name of water weevil from the fact that it is found only when the fields are overflowed.

L. O. Howard, U. S. Agricultural Report, 1881–2, p. 131.

★water-wheel (wâ'tėr-hwēl), n. In hydraul.: (a) A wheel moved by water and employed to turn machinery. There are four principal kinds of water-wheels—the overshot wheel, the undershot wheel, the breast-wheel, and the turbine. (b) A wheel for raising water in large quantities, as the Persian wheel. See wheel[1]. (c) The paddle-wheel of a steamer.—Bottom-discharge water-wheel. See bottom.—Lift water-wheel. (a) An undershot wheel. (b) A water-wheel the gudgeons and bearings of which may be raised or lowered to adapt the wheel to various heights of water-supply. E. H. Knight.—Radial-piston water-wheel, a form of breast-wheel having movable floats which extend radially outward to the breasting on the water side of the wheel to receive the pressure of the water during its descent, and are drawn inward as they rise on the opposite side of the wheel.—Water-wheel gate, a water-gate for controlling the quantity of water admitted to a wheel, according to the power required. See cut under scroll.—Water-wheel governor, a mechanism employed to produce uniformity of motion in a water-wheel.

water-white (wâ'tėr-hwīt), a. Perfectly transparent, as water; limpid and colorless. Spons' Encyc. Manuf., I. 646.

water-whorlgrass (wâ'tėr-hwėrl″gras), n. Same as water-hairgrass.

water-willow (wâ'tėr-wil″ō), n. 1. A European willow, Salix cinerea, sometimes considered a variety of the common sallow, S. Caprea.—2. An American acanthaceous plant, Dianthera Americana, an herb three feet high, of willow-like aspect, growing in water, having purplish flowers in axillary peduncled spikes.

water-wing (wâ'tėr-wing), n. A wall erected on the bank of a river adjoining a bridge, to secure the foundations from the action of the current.

waterwitch (wâ'tėr-wich), n. 1. A witch who dwells in the water; a water-nixy.—2. A person who pretends to have the power of discovering subterranean springs by means of a divining-rod. Bartlett, Americanisms, p. 741.—3. One of several water-birds noted for their quickness in diving, as a kind of duck, the buffle-headed duck, Clangula or Bucephala albeola, and especially various species of grebes or didappers, as the horned grebe, Podicipes cornu- tus, or the pied-billed dabchick, Podilymbus podicipes. See cuts under buffle, grebe, and Tachybaptes.—4. The stormy petrel, or Mother Carey's chicken. See cut under petrel.

water-withe (wâ'tėr-with), n. A species of vine, Vitis Caribæa, which grows in the West Indies in parched districts. It is so full of clear sap or water that a piece of the stem two or three yards long is said to afford a plentiful draught.

water-wood (wâ'tėr-wůd), n. A large rubiaceous tree, Chimarrhis cymosa, of river-banks in the West Indies.

waterwork (wâ'tėr-wėrk), n. 1. A structure, contrivance, or engine for conducting, distributing, or otherwise disposing of water: now commonly in the plural. Specifically—(a) An edifice with machinery constructed in London in 1594–5 for forcing up and conveying the water of the Thames to various parts of the city.

> Titus, the brave and valorous young gallant,
> Three years together in the town hath been,
> Yet my Lord Chancellor's tomb he hath not seen,
> Nor the new waterwork.
> Sir J. Davies (?), Epigrams (1596), vi., In Titum.

> Mam. Shall serve the whole city with preservative Weekly; each house his dose, and, at the rate—
> Sur. As he that built the waterwork doth with water.
> B. Jonson, Alchemist, ii. 1.

(b) [In plural form, as sing. or pl.] The aggregate of constructions and appliances for the collection, preservation, and distribution of water for domestic purposes, for the working of machinery, or otherwise for the use of a community. (c) An appliance through which water is spouted out in jets, sprays, or showers; a fountain; a hydraulic toy.

> Some [gardens] are beautified with basons of water in open pavilions, or with fountains and little water works, in which, and their pleasant summer houses, their chief beauty consists. Pococke, Description of the East, II. i. 123.

(c) pl. Same as tear-pump. [Humorous slang.]

> Sneaking little brute, . . . clapping on the waterworks just in the hardest place.
> T. Hughes, Tom Brown at Rugby, ii. 5.

2†. A marine scene or pageant.

> The first scæne is a water-worke presented by Oceanus, king of the sea.
> Dekker, Londons Tempe (Works, ed. Pearson, IV. 118).

[In the following quotation the word is used punningly, with reference to the freezing over of the Thames during the winter of 1607–8.

> Coun. Make me so much beholding to you as to receive from you the right picture of all these your water works. . . .
> Cit. The Thames began to put on his "freeze-coat," which he yet wears, about the week before Christmas; and hath kept it on till now this latter end of January.
> The Great Frost (Arber's Eng. Garner, I. 83).]

3†. Painting with water or something soluble in water as a vehicle.—4. Hence, a textile fabric, as canvas, painted in this manner, and used instead of tapestry to decorate apartments.

> The king for himself had a house of timber, . . . and for his other lodgings he had great and goodlie tents of blew water-worke, garnished with yellow and white.
> Holinshed, Chronicle, III. 819.

> For thy walls, a pretty slight drollery, . . . or the German hunting in water-work, is worth a thousand of these bed-hangings, and these fly-bitten tapestries.
> Shak., 2 Hen. IV., ii. 1. 158.

water-worker (wâ'tėr-wėr″kėr), n. One whose work has to do with water; in provincial English use, a maker of meadow-drains and wet ditches. Halliwell.

water-worm (wâ'tėr-wėrm), n. A water annelid, as a naidid.

water-worn (wâ'tėr-wōrn), a. Worn by the action of water; especially, smoothed by the force or action of running water, or water in motion: as, water-worn pebbles.

waterwort (wâ'tėr-wėrt), n. 1. A plant of the genus Elatine, or more broadly of the family Elatinaceæ, primarily E. Hydropiper of the old world.—2. The plant Philydrum lanuginosum, or (Lindley) any plant of the family Philydraceæ.

water-wraith (wâ'tėr-rāth), n. A supposed water-spirit, whose appearance prognosticates death or woe to the person seeing it.

> By this the storm grew loud apace;
> The water-wraith was shrieking.
> Campbell, Lord Ullin's Daughter.

watery (wâ'tėr-i), a. [< ME. watery, wateri, watry, watri, < AS. wæterig (= D. waterig = MHG. wezzeric, wazzeric, G. wässerig), < wæter, water: see water.] 1. Abounding in, moist with, or containing water; discharging water; wet; dripping; watered; specifically, of the eyes, tearful or running.

> "After sharpe shoures," quod Pees, "moste shene is the sonne;
> Is no weder warmer than after watery cloudes."
> Piers Plowman (B), xviii. 410.

> This lady
> Walks discontented, with her watery eyes
> Bent on the earth.
> Beau. and Fl., Maid's Tragedy, i. 1.

2. Consisting of water.

> The queen o' the sky,
> Whose watery arch and messenger am I [Iris].
> Shak., Tempest, iv. 1. 71.

> Far off from these a slow and silent stream,
> Lethe, the river of oblivion, rolls
> Her watery labyrinth. Milton, P. L., ii. 584.

3. Resembling water; suggestive of water. (a) Thin, as a liquid; of slight consistency.

> Nowe this vynes, whoso taketh kepe,
> Not wattery but thicke humours wepe.
> Palladius, Husbondrie (E. E. T. S.), p. 104.

Hence—(b) Weak; vapid; insipid.

> The heorte, thet was wateri, smecchles, and ne uelede no sauur of God. Ancren Riwle, p. 376.

> Slight Sir Robert with his watery smile.
> Tennyson, Edwin Morris.

(c) Liquid; soft, and more or less transparent; pale.

> The chasm in which the sun has sunk is shut, . . .
> And over it a space of watery blue,
> Which the keen evening star is shining through.
> Shelley, Evening.

> Slant watery lights, from parting clouds, apace
> Travel along the precipice's base.
> Wordsworth, Evening Walk.

(d) Insipid and soft or flabby, as a fish or its flesh.

4. Pertaining to, connected with, or affecting water: specifically used of the moon, as governing the tide.

> Whiles winter frets the seas, and wat'ry Orion.
> Surrey, Æneid, iv. 67.

> All springs reduce their currents to mine eyes,
> That I, being govern'd by the watery moon,
> May send forth plenteous tears to drown the world!
> Shak., Rich. III., ii. 2. 69.

> The watery god
> Roll'd from a silver urn his crystal flood.
> Dryden.

5†. Watering in desire, as the mouth; eager.

> What will it be,
> When that the watery palate tastes indeed
> Love's thrice repured nectar?
> Shak., T. and C., iii. 2. 22.

6. In her.: (a) Bounded by, or ornamented by, wavy lines: a rare epithet used in blazoning fanciful modern bearings. (b) Same as undé. [Rare.]—The watery star†. See star[1].—Watery fusion. See aqueous fusion, under fusion.—Watery itch, scabies attended with the formation of vesicles.

water-yam (wâ'tėr-yam), n. The latticeleaf; either of the plants Aponogeton fenestralis and A. Bernerianus: so called from its aquatic growth and farinaceous rootstock. See latticeleaf and Ouvirandra.

water-yarrow (wâ'tėr-yăr″ō), n. The water-violet, Hottonia palustris: so called from its leaves being finely divided like those of yarrow. Britten and Holland. [Prov. Eng.]

watht, n. [< Icel. vaðh = Sw. vad, a ford: see wade, n.] A ford. Halliwell.

wathe[1]†, n. [< ME. wathe (also, after Icel., waith, wayth), < AS. wāth, wǣth, hunting, game, = OHG. weida, MHG. G. weide, pasture, meadow, = Icel. veiðr, hunting, fishing. Cf. gain[1].] 1. The pursuit of game; hunting.

> "ȝe, we ar in wudlond," cothe the king, "and walkes on owre wayth, > For to hunte atte the herd, with houunde and with horne."
> Anturs of Arthur (ed. Robson), xxxiv.

2. Game; prey.

> Bi-fore alle the folk on the flette, frekez he beddez > Verayly his venysoun to fech hym byforne; . . .
> "ȝe I-wysse," quoth that other wyȝe, "here is wayth fayrest > That I seȝ this seuen ȝere in sesoun of wynter."
> Sir Gawayne and the Green Knight (E. E. T. S.), l. 1381.

> God send you som wathe!
> Now ar thise fowles flone into seyr countre.
> Towneley Mysteries, p. 33.

wathe[2]†, n. [< ME. wathe, wothe, < Icel. vāðhi, danger, injury.] Peril; harm; danger.

> Trwe mon trwe restore,
> Thenne thar [need] mon drede no wathe.
> Sir Gawayne and the Green Knight (E. E. T. S.), l. 2355.

> He vnwoundit, I-wis, out of wothe paste.
> Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), l. 10696.

wathely†, adv. [ME., < wathe[2] + -ly[2].] Dangerously; severely.

> Ector done was to dethe, & his day past,
> Achilles woundit full wothely in were of his lyffe.
> Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), l. 8827.

> Wroghte wayes fulle wyde, werrayande knyghtez,
> And wondes alle wathely, that in the waye stondez!
> Morte Arthure (E. E. T. S.), l. 2090.

Watling street. [< ME. Watlinge-strete, < AS. Wætlinga strǣt, lit. the Watlings' street: Wætlinga, gen. pl. of Wætling, a descendant of Wætla (< Wætla, a man's name, + -ing[3]); strǣt, a road, street.] 1. A celebrated Roman road leading from London (and possibly from Dover) northwestward across Britain. Hence—2†. The Milky Way, the ordinary name of which implies that it is a road.

> Se yonder, lo, the Galaxye,
> The which men clepe the Milky Weye,
> For hit ys white; and somme, parfeye,
> Callen hyt Watlynge strete.
> Chaucer, House of Fame, l. 939.

★watt (wot), n. [So called from the Scottish engineer and inventor James Watt (1736–1819).] The practical unit of electrical activity or power. The watt is equal to 10^7 ergs per second, or the same number of absolute c. g. s. units of electrical activity; or it is the rate of working in a direct-current circuit when the E. M. F. is one volt and the current one ampere. One horse-power is equal to 746 watts.

watte†, n. See wat[3].

Watteau back. In dressmaking, an arrangement of the back of a woman's dress in which broad folds or plaits hang from the neck to the bottom of the skirt without interruption; by extension, any loose back to a dress, not girded at the waist. See cut under sack.

Watteau bodice. A bodice of a woman's dress having a square opening at the neck, and presenting some resemblance to the costumes in the paintings by the artist Watteau (beginning of the eighteenth century).

Watteau mantle. See mantle.

wattle (wot'l), n. [Also dial. waddle; < ME. watel, < AS. watel, watul, a hurdle, in pl. twigs, thatching, tiles; cf. Bav. wadel, twigs, fir-branches, Swiss wedele, a bundle of twigs; perhaps akin to withy, weed[1]. Cf. wallet.] 1. A framework made of interwoven rods or twigs; a hurdle. See hurdle.

> The walls are wattles, and the covering leaves.
> Scott, The Poacher.

> They are gallant hares, and the scent lies thick right across another meadow, . . . and then over a good wattle with a ditch on the other side.
> T. Hughes, Tom Brown at Rugby, i. 7.

2. A rod; a wand; a switch; a twig.

> A Wattle, rod, vibex.
> Levins, Manip. Vocab. (E. E. T. S.), p. 38.

> Nae whip nor spur, but just a wattle
> O' saugh or hazel.
> Burns, Farmer's Salutation to his Auld Mare.

3†. A basket; a bag or wallet. Piers Plowman (C), xi. 269.—4. In ornith., a fleshy lobe hanging from the front of the head; specifically, such a lobe of the domestic hen, or a like formation of any bird. Wattles most properly so called are paired, as in the hen, but may be single, as the dewlap of the turkey. They are very various in size, shape, and color, but are usually pendent, and of some bright tint, as red, yellow, or blue. They occur in several different orders of birds, and among species whose near relatives are devoid of such appendages. Similar lobes or flaps on the auriculars are sometimes called ear-wattles, though more properly ear-lobes. See wattle-bird, wattle-crow, phrases under wattled, and cuts under Gallus and Rasores.

> The combs or wattles [of young gamecocks] are to be cut as soon as they appear; and the cock chickens are to be separated as soon as they begin to peck each other.
> J. Ashton, Social Life in Reign of Queen Anne, I. 302.

5. A flap of skin forming a sort of dewlap on each side of the neck of some domestic swine.

> Ye Wattle of a hog, neuus.
> Levins, Manip. Vocab. (E. E. T. S.), p. 38.

> Goitrons, Waddles, or wattles, the two little and long excrescences which hang teat-like at either side of the throat of some hogs. Cotgrave, 1611.

6. In ichth., a fleshy excrescence about the mouth; a barbel.

> The Barbel is so called, says Gesner, by reason of his barb or wattles at his mouth, which are under his nose or chaps. I. Walton, Complete Angler, p. 166.

7. One of various Australian and Tasmanian acacias, valued to some extent for their wood and for their gum, but more for their bark, which is rich in tannin. For tanbark the most important species are Acacia decurrens, or a variety of that species sometimes named A. mollissima, the common black wattle, also called green or feathered wattle, and A. pycnantha, the broad-leafed or golden wattle. The silver wattle, A. dealbata, closely allied to the black wattle, is distinguished by the ashen color of its young foliage, and is a taller tree of moister ground. Its bark is inferior, but is used for lighter leathers. Other species yielding tan-bark are A. saligna, the blackwood or lightwood, A. Melanoxylon, the native hickory, A. penninervis, etc. Several wattles yield a gum resembling gum arabic, somewhat exported for use in cotton-printing as an adhesive, etc. The principal sources of this product are the black wattle, the broad-leafed wattle, and A. homolophylla.

8. In her., a wattle or dewlap used in a bearing. Compare wattled.—African wattle, a South African tree, Acacia Natalitia.—Alpine wattle, Acacia pravissima, a shrub or small tree of the Victorian Alps.—Black wattle, feathered wattle, golden wattle, green wattle. See def. 7.—Prickly wattle, Acacia juniperina, an evergreen shrub of Australia and Tasmania.—Raspberry-jam wattle. Same as raspberry-jam tree.—Savannah wattle, two West Indian verbenaceous trees, Citharexylum quadrangulare and C. cinereum.—Silver wattle. See def. 7.—Soap-pod wattle. Same as soapnut, 2.—Varnish-wattle, the Australian Acacia vernicifiua.—Wallaby wattle, an Australian shrub, Acacia rigens.—Wattle and daub, a rough mode of building huts, cottages, etc., of interwoven twigs plastered with mud or clay: often used attributively: as, wattle-and-daub construction. Also wattle and dab.

Melbourne in those days was a straggling village, where the fathers of the settlement were content with slab shanties, or wattle-and-daub huts.
Quoted in Contemporary Rev., LIII. 8.

wattle (wot'l), v. t.; pret. and pp. wattled, ppr. wattling. [Early mod. E. also watle; < ME. watelen, watlen; < wattle, n.] 1. To bind, wall, fence, or otherwise fit with wattles.

And ther-with Grace by-gan to make a good foundement, And watelide hit and wallyde hit with hus peynes and hus passion. Piers Plowman (C), xxii. 328.

Smoke was seen to arise within a shed y^t^ was joynd to ye end of ye storehouse, which was watled up with bowes. Bradford, Plymouth Plantation, p. 152.

2. To form by interweaving twigs or branches: as, to wattle a fence.

The folded flocks penn'd in their wattled cotes. Milton, Comus, l. 344.

And round them still the wattled hurdles hung. M. Arnold, Balder Dead, ii.

3. To interweave; interlace; form into basket-work or network.

A night of Clouds muffled their brows about,
Their wattled locks gusht all in Riuers out.
Sylvester, tr. of Du Bartas's Weeks, i. 2.

The roof was a thatch composed of white-birch twigs, sweet-flag, and straw wattled together.
S. Judd, Margaret, i. 3.

4. To switch; beat. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

wattle-bark (wot'l-bärk), n. A bark used for tanning, obtained from several species of Acacia growing in Australia. See wattle, 7.

wattle-bird (wot'l-bėrd), n. 1. The Australian wattled or warty-faced honey-eater, Anthochæra carunculata: formerly also called wattled bee-eater and wattled crow by Latham, and pie à pendeloques by Daudin. Among its former New Latin names are Merops or Corvus carunculatus, Creadion carunculatum, and Corvus paradoxus. It inhabits Australia, and has ear-wattles about half an inch long. In a related species of Tasmania, A. inauris, the wattles are more than an inch long. The plumage is variegated with gray, brown, and white. Several other meliphagine birds are also wattled.

Wattle-bird (Anthochæra carunculata).

2. A wattle-crow, Glaucopis cinerea, the cinereous wattle-bird of Latham.—3. A wattle-turkey.

wattle-crow (wot'l-krō), n. Any bird of the group Glaucopinæ or Callæatinæ; a wattled tree-crow; originally and specifically, the cinereous wattle-bird, Glaucopis cinerea, of the South Island of New Zealand. The wattles are rich-orange, blue at the base; the bill and feet are black; the eyes are dark-brown; the plumage is slate-gray, black on the face and tip of the tail; the length of the male is 16½ inches, of the female 15 inches; the sexes are alike in color. A second species, G. wilsoni, of the North Island, has blue wattles.

Wattle-crow (Glaucopis cinerea).

★wattled (wot'ld), a. [< wattle + -ed[2].] Having a wattle or wattles, as a bird; specifically, in her., noting a cock's head, and the like, when the wattles are of a different tincture from the rest: generally used in the expression wattled and combed. Also jewlapped, jelloped, and barbed.

The wattled cocks strut to and fro.
Longfellow, Wayside Inn, Prelude.

Wattled bee-eater†. Same as wattle-bird, 1. Latham.—Wattled bird of paradise, Paradigalla carunculata of New Guinea. This has two pairs of wattles, one on each side of the forehead, of a yellowish-green color, and another at the base of the mandible on each side, of a blue and orange color. The male is 11 inches long, and mostly of a velvety-black color with various iridescence.—Wattled creeper† of Latham, Ptilotis carunculata, a meliphagine bird of the Samoan, Friendly, and Fiji islands, chiefly of olivaceous, yellowish, and grayish coloration. See Ptilotis.—Wattled crow. (a) Any wattle-crow. (b†) Same as wattle-bird, 1. Latham.—Wattled honey-eater. Same as wattle-bird, 1.—Wattled plover, any spur-winged plover of the genus Lobivanellus, as L. lobatus, having the face beset with fleshy lobes and wattles. The species named has these formations highly developed, a small hind toe, and no crest; the plumage is chiefly white, varied with black on the head, neck, wings, and tail. See the case of wattles and spurs explained under spur-winged.—Wattled starе† of Latham, Creadion carunculatum, a corvine bird of New Zealand, 8 or 9 inches long, chiefly of a chestnut color, the head and tail black, the wings black and chestnut, the wattles yellow or vermilion.—Wattled tree-crow, a wattle-crow.

Wattled Plover (Lobivanellus lobatus).

wattle-faced† (wot'l-fāst), a. Lantern-jawed; thin-faced.

Thou wattle-fac'd sing'd pig.
Middleton (and another), Mayor of Queenborough, iii. 3.

wattle-gum (wot'l-gum), n. An Australian gum. See gum arabic, under gum[2].

wattle-jaws (wot'l-jâz), n. pl. Long, lanky jaws; lantern-jaws. Halliwell.

wattle-tree (wot'l-trē), n. Same as wattle, 7.

The golden blossoms of the wattle-trees mark the period [spring] everywhere in Australia.
Contemporary Rev., LII. 407.

wattle-turkey (wot'l-tėr″ki), n. The brush-turkey, Talegallus lathami. See cut under Talegallus.

wattlework (wot'l-wėrk), n. A wattled fabric or structure; wickerwork.

A nest of wattle-work formed of silver wire.
S. K. Cat. Sp. Ex., 1862.

The huts were probably more generally made of wattle-work, like those of the Swiss lakes.
Dawkins, Early Man in Britain, p. 271.

wattling (wot'ling), n. [Verbal n. of wattle, v.] A construction made by interweaving twigs, osiers, or flat and elastic material of any sort, with stakes or rods as a substructure.

The houses . . . have here 2 or 3 partitions on the ground floor, made with a watling of canes or sticks.
Dampier, Voyages, an. 1688.

★wattmeter (wot'mē″tėr), n. [< watt + meter[2].] An instrument for measuring in watts the rate of working or the activity in an electric circuit.—Electrodynamic wattmeter, a wattmeter or electrodynamometer the indications of which depend on the mutual forces between two coils through one of which a current flows proportional in strength to the electromotive force, while through the other there flows either the whole or a definite fraction of the whole current in the circuit.—Electrostatic wattmeter, an electrometer arranged so that its indications depend on the product of the electrostatic difference of potential between the poles of the electric generator and the electrostatic difference of potential between the ends of a known non-inductive resistance in the circuit through which the current is flowing.

wauble, v. A dialectal (Scotch) form of wabble[1].

wauch, waugh[2] (wâch), a. A Scotch form of wallow[3].

waucht, waught (wâcht), n. [Also quaich, quaigh, etc. (see quaigh); < Ir. Gael. cuach, a cup, bowl, milking-pail; cf. W. cwch, a round concavity, hive, crown of a hat, boat. Cf. quaff.] A large draught of any liquid. [Scotch.]

She drank it a' up at a waught,
Left na ae drap ahin'.
King Henry (Child's Ballads, I. 150).

wauff, a. See waff[3].

waugh[1], v. i. A variant of waff[1] for wane[1].

waugh[2], a. See wauch.

waught, n. See waucht.

waukrife, a. See wakerife.

waul, wawl (wâl), v. i. [Freq. of waw[4]; cf. caterwaul, caterwaw.] To cry as a cat; squall.

The helpless infant, coming wauling and crying into the world. Scott.

waule, n. See wall[3].

waur (wâr), a. A Scotch form of war[2] for worse.

waure, n. A dialectal variant of ware[3].

wau-wau, n. Same as wow-wow. H. O. Forbes, Eastern Archipelago, p. 70.

wave[1] (wāv), v.; pret. and pp. waved, ppr. waving. [< ME. waven, < AS. wafian, wave, fluctuate (rare), also waver in mind, wonder (cf. AS. wæfre, wavering, restless, wæfer-sȳn, wavering vision, spectacle); cf. Icel. vafa,* indicated in the freq. vafra, vafla, waver, in vafi, doubt, vafl, hesitation, also in vāfa, vōfa, mod. vofa, swing, vibrate, waver, = MHG. waben, wave, = Bav. waiben, waver, totter; cf. MHG. freq. waberen, wabelen, webelen, fluctuate, waver. The orig. verb is rare in early use, but the freq. forms represented by waver and wabble are common: see waver[1], wabble[1]. The word has been more or less confused with wave[2], waive.] I. intrans. 1. To move up and down or to and fro; undulate; fluctuate; bend or sway back and forth; flutter.

The discurrouris saw thame cumande
With baneris to the vynd vafand.
Barbour, Bruce (E. E. T. S.), ix. 245.

I wave, as the see dothe, Je vague or je vndoye. . . .
After a storme the see waveth. Palsgrave, p. 772.

Beneath, stern Neptune shakes the solid ground;
The forests wave, the mountains nod around.
Pope, Iliad, xx. 78.

2. To have an undulating form or direction; curve alternately in opposite directions.

To curl their waving hairs. Pope, R. of the L., ii. 97.

Thrice-happy he that may caress
The ringlet's waving balm.
Tennyson, Talking Oak.

3. To give a signal by a gesture of movement up and down or to and fro.

A bloody arm it is, . . . and now
It waves unto us!
B. Jonson, Catiline, i. 1.

She waved to me with her hand.
Tennyson, Maud, ix.

4†. To waver in mind; vacillate.

They wave in and out, no way sufficiently grounded, no way resolved what to think, speak, or write.
Hooker, Eccles. Polity, v. 43.

II. trans. 1. To move to and fro; cause to shake, rock, or sway; brandish.

The Childe of Elle hee fought soe well,
As his weapon he wavde amaine.
The Child of Elle (Child's Ballads, III. 230).

All the company fell singing an Hebrew hymn in a barbarous tone, waving themselves to and fro.
Evelyn, Diary, Jan. 16, 1645.

And July's eve, with balmy breath,
Wav'd the blue-bells on Newark heath.
Scott, L. of L. M., vi., Epil.

Specifically—2. To offer as a wave-offering. See wave-offering.

He shall wave the sheaf before the Lord, to be accepted for you. Lev. xxiii. 11.

3. To shape or dispose in undulations; cause to wind in and out, as a line in curves, or a surface in ridges and furrows.

Horns whelk'd and waved like the enridged sea.
Shak., Lear, iv. 6. 71.

This mud [caused by a land-slide] disported itself very much like lava flowing down inclined slopes, the terminations being escalloped, and the surface waved by small ridges like ropy lava. Science, VI. 87.

4. To decorate with a waving or winding pattern. [Rare.]

Ile giue him th' armes which late I conquer'd in Asteropæus; forg'd of brass, and wav'd about with tin;
'Twill be a present worthy him.
Chapman, Iliad, xxiii. 482.

5. To signal by a wave of the hand, or of a flag, a handkerchief, or the like; direct by a waving gesture or other movement, as in beckoning.

We mistrusted some knauery, and, being waued by them to come a shoare, yet we would not.
Hakluyt's Voyages, II. ii. 33.

Look, with what courteous action
It waves you to a more removed ground.
Shak., Hamlet, i. 4. 61.

6. To express, as a command, direction, farewell, etc., by a waving movement or gesture.

Perchance the maiden smiled to see Yon parting lingerer wave adieu.
Scott, L. of the L., ii. 5.

I retained my station when he waved to me to go, and announced, "I can not think of leaving you, sir."
Charlotte Brontë, Jane Eyre, xii.

7. To water, as silk. See water, v. t., 3.

The waved water chamelot was from the beginning esteemed the richest and bravest wearing.
Holland, tr. of Pliny, viii. 48.

★ wave[1] (wāv), n. [< ME. wave*, wawe; < wave, v. The word wave in its most common sense has taken the place, in literary use, of the diff. noun waw, wawe, a wave. The form wawe could not, however, change into wave: see waw[1]. The noun wave, as well as the verb, has been confused with waive[1].] 1. A disturbance of the surface of a body in the form of a ridge and trough, propagated by forces tending to restore the surface to its figure of equilibrium, the particles not advancing with the wave.

No ship yit karf the wawes grene and blewe.
Chaucer, Former Age, l. 21.

When you do dance, I wish you
A wave o' the sea, that you might ever do Nothing but that. Shak., W. T., iv. 4. 141.

2. Water; a stream; the sea. [Poetical.]

The laughing tides that lave
These Edens of the eastern wave.
Byron, The Giaour.

3. A form assumed by parts of a body or medium which are out of equilibrium, such that as fast as the particles return they are replaced by others which move into neighboring positions of stress, so that the whole disturbance is continually propagated into new parts of the medium while preserving more or less perfectly the same shape and character. In a somewhat wider sense the word is applied in cases where there is no progression through the medium; thus, the shape of a vibrating piano-string may be called a wave. But in its narrowest and most proper sense it is restricted to a progressive periodic motion or disturbance of a medium. Waves on the surfaces of liquids are distinguished into four orders. A wave of the first order, also called a wave of translation, leaves the particles, after its passage, shifted in the line of its motion. It is also called a solitary wave, because a single impulse produces but one elevation or depression, which has no definite length, but extends over the whole surface. The negative wave of this sort shortly breaks; it is only the positive wave, which leaves the particles in advance of their initial positions, which can be propagated far. This wave is also called Scott Russell's great wave, because it was first discovered by that engineer in 1834, and because, owing to its form, it cannot be seen unless it is very high. The velocity of such a wave is equal to $\sqrt{g(h+k)}$, where g is the acceleration of gravity, h the depth of the liquid in repose, and k the height of the crest of the wave above the plane of repose. This wave dies down of itself in a canal of uniform depth, independently of friction, and when it passes into shallow water it breaks as soon as h is no greater than k. A canal-boat produces such a wave, and consequently can be propelled at the rate of speed of the wave far more economically than at any other. In waves of the second order, called oscillatory waves, observation shows that each particle describes at a uniform rate of motion a circle in a vertical plane; but according to theory other orbits are possible. The particle at the crest of the wave is at the highest part of its path, that in the trough at the lowest. As long as the momentum of the particles is kept up, wave must succeed wave. If the water has a flow opposite to the direction of propagation of the waves and equal to it in velocity, it is plain that each particle will describe a prolate cycloid, and this is consequently the form of the waves. Waves thus brought to a standstill by the flow of the water are called standing waves. (See fig. 1.) They are often seen in rapidly running water.

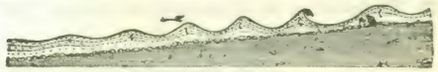

Fig. 1. Standing waves in a torrent.

If the motion of the liquid is irrotational, theory shows that the waves cannot be cycloidal. But in regard to this whole subject neither theory nor observation can be trusted implicitly to give the truth of nature. The velocity of propagation of oscillatory waves, at least in deep water, is represented by the expression $\sqrt{(g\lambda/2\pi)}$, where λ is the length of the wave from crest to crest. But the velocity of propagation of a group of waves is much slower. Oscillatory waves break on a shelving shore when their height is about equal to the depth of the water, and from each one, as it breaks, a wave of the first order is produced. (See fig. 2.) Waves of the third order, called ripples, are distinguished from those of the second order in the fact that the shorter they are the more rapidly they move. While an oscillatory wave 32 inches long will advance 3 feet per second, and one of 3 inches long only 1 foot per second, a ripple a quarter of an inch long will move 1 foot per second, a ripple an eighth of an inch long will move 1½ feet per second, and so on. The reason is that the force of restoration of the particles is here not chiefly gravity, but the surface-tension of the liquid. Ripples very rapidly die out. Liquid waves of the fourth order are similar in character to sound-waves. They are propagated in water at the rate of about 1,580 yards per second—that is, at a much greater speed than that of sound in air. In the case of sound propagated in the air, the waves are formed by the alternate forward and back motion of the air-particles in the direction in which the sound is being propagated; the waves are consequently waves of condensation and rarefaction, having in the free air a spherical form. The amplitude of vibration or excursion of each particle is very small, but the wave-length is large—for the middle C of the keyboard, about 4½ feet. A sound-wave travels in air about 1,100 feet per second. (See further under sound[5].) In the case of radiant energy (heat and light) propagated through the ether, the ether-particles vibrate transversely to the line of propagation; here the wave-length is very small—for violet light about 0.0004 cm., for red about twice this length, while the infra-red spectrum contains waves at least 0.05 cm. in length (see spectrum). A light-wave (or, more generally, an ether-wave) travels in space about 185,000 miles per second. In the case of oscillating electrical discharges, as between two knobs, a disturbance is produced in the surrounding ether which is propagated as electric waves with a velocity like that of light. These electric waves are reflected from the surface of a conductor, but are transmitted by a non-conductor, as pitch, and may be brought to a focus; they may be made to interfere, then forming nodal points, and by passage through a grating of parallel wires they may be polarized. These electric waves are hence in all essential respects like light-waves, but differ in their relatively enormous length and the corresponding slowness of the oscillations. These experiments which were first performed by Hertz in 1887 form a most important confirmation of the electromagnetic theory of light proposed by Maxwell (see light).

Fig. 2. Oscillatory waves rolling in and breaking upon the shore, and giving rise to a series of waves of translation.

That which in waves of fluid is rest is in waves of sound silence, and in waves of light darkness.
Lommel, Light (trans.), p. 220.

The reason why one end of the coloured band [spectrum] . . . is red and the other blue is that in light as in sound we have a system of disturbances or waves; we have long waves and short waves, and what the low notes are to music the red waves are to light.
J. N. Lockyer, Spect. Anal., p. 34.

4. One of a series of curves in a waving line, or of ridges in a furrowed surface; an undulation; a swell.

A winning wave (deserving note)
In the tempestuous petticote.
Herrick, Delight in Disorder.

The ears are furnished with feather to the same extent, with a slight wave, but no curl.
Dogs of Great Britain and America, p. 107.

5. Figuratively, a flood, influx, or rush of anything, marked by unusual volume, extent, uprising, etc., and thus contrasted with preceding and following periods of the opposite character; something that swells like a sea-wave at recurring intervals; often, a period of intensity, activity, or important results: as, a wave of religious enthusiasm; waves of prosperity.

A light wind blew from the gates of the sun,
And waves of shadow went over the wheat.
Tennyson, The Poet's Song.

An emotional wave once roused tends to continue for a certain length of time. A. Bain, Emotions and Will, p. 32.

Specifically—6. In meteor., an atmospheric oscillation that is not local but advances progressively over the earth like an ocean wave. When such a wave is continuously evolved anew, as by the flow of air over a mountain or ridge, it has the appearance of remaining always in place and is called a forced or stationary or standing air wave. A barometric wave is a progressive oscillation of atmospheric pressure—a wave of rarefaction and compression.

To Willy Wien, a pupil of Helmholtz, we owe the development of problems relating to vortex and wave motions in the earth's atmosphere.
Cleveland Abbe, in An. Rep. Smithsonian Inst., 1907, [p. 303.

7. A waved or wavy line of color or texture; an undulation; specifically, the undulating line or streak of luster on cloth watered and calendered.—8. A waving; a gesture, or a signal given by waving.

With clear-rustling wave
The scented pines of Switzerland Stand dark round thy green grave.
M. Arnold, Stanzas in Memory of the Author of Obermann.

A magnificent old toddy-mixer . . . answered my question by a wave of one hand.
O. W. Holmes, Old Vol. of Life, p. 53.

9. A book-name of certain geometrid moths. Thus, Acidalia rubricata is the tawny wave; A. contiguaria is Greening's wave; Venusia cambraria is the Welsh wave, etc.—Barometric wave. See def. 6.—Cold wave, a broad, comparatively shallow layer of cold, dry, clear air, advancing as a whole southward and eastward over Canada and the United States, sometimes pouring a small part of its substance westward over the Rocky Mountains into the valleys of the Pacific coast; a norther of the coast of Texas; the Nortes of the coasts of Mexico and Cuba; a blizzard when it brings exceedingly low temperatures with high winds and light snow. The term is specifically used by the United States Weather Bureau only when the temperatures are lower than 40° F. and there has been a sudden fall of 20° F. or more within 24 hours. Similar waves occur in Europe from the north and east and in China from the north and west.

When the fall of temperature in twenty-four hours is twenty degrees or more, and covers an area of at least fifty thousand square miles, and the temperature in any part of the area goes as low as 36°, it is called a cold-wave.
Amer. Jour. Sci., 3d ser., XL. 463.

Dicrotic wave. See dicrotic.—Hot wave, the advance of a mass of hot air over a broad extent of country. The hot waves that come from the south are reasonably supposed to be due to the warmth of the southern regions, but when they come from the west, as they frequently do, and, in general, from whatever direction they come, the high temperature at the earth's surface and the cloudless sky are at least partly due to the fact that the air is descending and warmed by compression faster than it can lose its heat by radiation. [U. S.]—Length of a wave, or wave-length, the distance between any two particles which are in the same phase.—Period of a wave, the time between the passage of successive crests, or between successive extreme displacements of a particle in the same manner.—Predicrotic wave. See predicrotic.—Smoky wave. See smoky.—Storm-wave. (a) A sea-wave raised at the center of a cyclonic storm by the low atmospheric pressure and the force of the winds. It advances with the progressive motion of the storm, and has all the properties of a true wave. When augmented by a heavy fall of rain, and blown by strong winds upon a low shore, the storm-wave causes disastrous inundations. The thickly populated low-lands at the head of the Bay of Bengal have been the scene of frequent storm-floods, occasioning enormous losses of life and property. (b) In general, on sea-coasts, the increased wave-motion accompanying storms.—Subangled wave, a British geometrid moth, Acidalia strigilaria.—Tidal wave. See tidal.—Type of a wave. See type.—Warm wave. See hot wave, above.—Wave of contraction, in physiol., visible muscular contraction as propagated from a point where the muscle itself is stimulated.—Wave of stimulation, in physiol., the motor influence of a nerve, supposed to be transmitted by molecular undulation.

I shall always speak of muscle-fibres as conveying a visible wave of contraction, and of nerve-fibres as conveying an invisible, or molecular, wave of stimulation.
G. J. Romanes, Jelly Fish, etc., p. 25.

Wave of translation. See def. 3. (See also brain-wave, pulse-wave.)=Syn. 1. Wave, Billow, Surge, Breaker, Surf, Swell, Ripple. Wave is the general word. A billow is a great round and rolling wave. Surge is only a somewhat stronger word for billow. A breaker is a wave breaking or about to break upon the shore or upon rocks. Surf is the collective name for breakers: as, to bathe in the surf; it is sometimes popularly used for the foam at the edge or crest of the breaker. Swell is the name for the fact of the rising (and falling) of water, especially after the wind has subsided, or for the water that so rises (and falls), or for any particular and occasional disturbance of water by such rising (and falling): as, the boat was swamped by the swell from the steamer. Ripple is the name for the smallest kind of wave.

The high watery walls came rolling in, and at their highest tumbled into surf. . . . Some white-headed billows thundered on. . . . The breakers rose, and, looking over one another, bore one another down, and rolled in, in interminable hosts. . . . The sea . . . carried men, spars, . . . into the boiling surge.
Dickens, David Copperfield, lv.

This mounting wave will roll us shoreward soon.
Tennyson, Lotos-Eaters.

Across the boundless east we drove,
Where those long swells of breaker sweep
The nutmeg rocks and isles of clove.
Tennyson, The Voyage.

As the shadows of sun-gilt ripples
On the golden bed of a brook.
Lowell, The Changeling.

wave[2]†, v. A former spelling of waive.

wave[3]†. An obsolete preterit of weave[1].

wave-action (wāv′ak″shon), n. See action.

wave-breast (wāv′brest), n. A breast offered as a wave-offering (which see).

waved (wāvd), a. [< wave[1] + -ed[2].] 1. Having a waving outline or appearance. See wave[1], v. t. Specifically—(a) In zoöl., marked with waves; wavy in color or texture; undulated. (b) In entom., crenate or crenulate, as a margin; sinuous; undulated. (c) In arms, shaped in waves or undulations, as the edges of certain swords and daggers. Heavy swords of the middle ages were sometimes shaped in this way, apparently with the object of breaking plates of armor the more readily. In the Malay creese, however, the object is probably to make a more dangerous wound.

Malay Creese, with waved blade.

2. Same as watered: noting silk, forged steel, etc.—3. In bot., undate.—4. In her., same as undé.—Waved sandpiper†. See sandpiper.—Waved sword, in her., a flamboyant sword used as a bearing.—Waved wheel. See wheel[1].

wave-front (wāv′frunt), n. The continuous surface including all the particles in the same phase. It is a spherical surface for sound, and for light in an isotropic medium.

wave-goose (wāv′gös), n. The brant- or brent-goose, Bernicla brenta. [Durham, Eng.]

wave-length (wāv′length), n. The distance between the crests of two adjacent waves, or between the lowest parts of the depressions on each side of a wave; more generally, the distance between any particle of the disturbed medium and the next which is in the same phase with it. See wave[1], 3.

The wave-length of a ray of light in any given substance is consequently obtained by dividing the wave-length in air by the index of refraction of the substance itself.
Lommel, Light (trans.), p. 245.

No difference but that of wave-length is recognized between waves of radiant heat and of radiant light.
Sci. Amer. Supp., p. 8801.

waveless (wāv′les), a. [< wave[1] + -less.] Free from waves; undisturbed; unagitated; still.

Smoother than this waveless spring.
Peele, David and Bethsabe.

The mist that sleeps on a waveless sea.
Hogg, Kilmeny.

Unmoved the bannered blazonry hung waveless as a pall.
Barham, Ingoldsby Legends, II. iii.

wavelet (wāv′let), n. [< wave[1] + -let.] A small wave; a ripple.

Like the vague sighings of a wind at even,
That wakes the wavelets of the slumbering sea.
Shelley, Queen Mab, viii.

The head, with its thin wavelets of brown hair, indents the little pillow. George Eliot, Amos Barton, ii.

wave-line (wāv′līn), n. 1. The outline of a wave; specifically, in physics, the path of a wave of light, sound, etc., or the graphic representation of such a path.—2. Naut., the general outline of the surface of sea-waves: specifically used attributively to note a method of ship-building devised by J. Scott Russell, in which the lines of the hull of a vessel are adapted scientifically to the lines of the waves, and are nearly or quite cycloidal.—3. One of the series of lines or furrows produced by the sea-waves upon a sandy beach.

wavellite (wā′vel-īt), n. [Named after William Wavell, an English medical practitioner (died 1829), by whom it was discovered.] A hydrous phosphate of aluminium, commonly found in radiated hemispherical or globular crystalline concretions from a very small size to 1 inch in diameter, and of a white to yellow-green or brown color. See cut under radiate.

wave-loaf (wāv′lōf), n. A loaf for a wave-offering.

Ye shall bring out of your habitations two wave loaves of two tenth deals. Lev. xxiii. 17.

wave-molding (wāv′mōl″ding), n. In arch., a molding of undulating outline, resembling more or less closely a succession of waves; particularly, a molding of Greek origin, much used in Renaissance and modern architecture, having the character of a series of breaking waves, much conventionalized.

wave-motion (wāv′mō″shon), n. Motion in curves like that of the waves of the sea; progressive undulatory motion by which any disturbance of equilibrium is transmitted.

While ether-waves are in course of traversing the ether, there is neither heat, light, nor chemical decomposition; merely wave-motion, and transference of energy by wave-motion. A. Daniell, Prin. of Physics, p. 434.

The essential characteristic of wave-motion is that a disturbance of some kind is handed on from one portion of a solid or fluid mass to another.
P. G. Tait, Encyc. Brit., XIV. 603.

wave-offering (wāv′of″ėr-ing), n. In the ancient Jewish law, an offering presented with a horizontal movement of the hands forward and backward and toward the right and left, whereas the heave-offering was elevated and lowered.

wave-path (wāv′path), n. The line along which any point in any wave is propagated. [Rare.]

The radial lines along which an earthquake may be propagated from the centrum are called wave-paths.
J. Milne, Earthquakes, p. 9.

waver[1] (wā′vėr), v. [< ME. waveren, wayveren, vacillate, < AS. as if wafrian* (cf. wæfre, wavering, wandering, restless: said of flame and fire, the mind or spirit, etc.) = MHG. waberen, G. dial. wabern, waver, totter, move to and fro, = Icel. vafra, hover about, = Norw. vavra, flap about; also, with var. suffix, MHG. wabelen, webelen, fluctuate, waver, = Icel. vafla, hover about (see wabble[1]); freq. of the verb represented by wave[1], q. v.] I. intrans. 1. To move up and down or to and fro; wave; float; flutter; be tossed or rocked about; sway.

All in wer for to walt, wayueronde he sote,
But he held hym on horse, houyt o lofte.
Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), l. 8266.

For an Outlawe, this is the Lawe,
That Men hym take and binde,
Without pytee, hanged to bee,
And waver with the Wynde.
The Nut-Brown Maid, quoted by Prior (Poems, [ed. 1756, I. 147).

The wind in his raiment wavered.
William Morris, Sigurd, ii.

2. To quiver; flicker; glimmer; glance.

As when a sunbeam wavers warm
Within the dark and dimpled beck.
Tennyson, Miller's Daughter.

3. To falter; fail; reel; totter.

Keep my wits, Heaven! I feel 'em wavering;
Oh God, my head! Fletcher, Pilgrim, iii. 3.

How many wavering steps can we retrace in our past lives! Channing, Perfect Life, p. 74.

Like the day of doom it seemed to her wavering senses.
Longfellow, Evangeline, i. 5.

4. To be undetermined or irresolute; fluctuate; vacillate.

Therefore be sure, and waver not of God's love and favour towards you in Christ.
J. Bradford, Letters (Parker Soc., 1853), II. 132.

He that wavereth is like a wave of the sea driven with the wind and tossed. Jas. i. 6.

I expect you should sollicit me as much as if I were wavering at the Grate of a Monastery, with one Foot over the Threshold. Congreve, Way of the World, iv. 5.

=Syn. 1 and 4. Vacillate. See fluctuate.—4. Hesitate, etc. See scruple.

II.† trans. 1. To cause to wave or move to and fro; set in waving motion; brandish.

Item, if the Admirall shall happen to hull in the night, then to make a wauering light ouer his other light, wauering the light vpon a pole. Hakluyt's Voyages, III. 147.

2. To demur or scruple about; hesitate at; shirk.

The inconstant Barons wavering every hour
The fierce encounter of this boist'rous tide
That easily might her livelihood devour.
Drayton, Barons' Wars, i. 34.

waver[2] (wā′vėr), n. [< wave[1] + -er[1].] One who or that which waves; specifically, in printing, an inking-roller; an apparatus which distributes ink on the table or on other rollers, but not on the form of types: so called from its vibratory movement.

As the carriage returns, this strip of ink is distributed on the inking table by rollers placed diagonally across the machine. The diagonal position gives them a waving motion; hence they are called wavers.
Encyc. Brit., XXIII. 706.

waver[3] (wā′vėr), n. [Perhaps < wave[1] + -er[1] (?).] A sapling or timberling left standing in a fallen wood. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

As you pass along, prune and trim up all the young wavers. Evelyn, Sylva, III. i. 7.

waver-dragon (wā′vėr-drag″on), n. [< waver for wiver + dragon.] In her., the wivern.

waverer (wā′vėr-ėr), n. [< waver[1] + -er[1].] One who or that which wavers or fluctuates; especially, a person who vacillates or is undecided in mind.

Come, young waverer, come, go with me.
Shak., R. and J., ii. 3. 89.

This prospect of converting votes was a dangerous distraction to Mr. Brooke; his impression that waverers were likely to be allured by wavering statements . . . gave Will Ladislaw much trouble. George Eliot, Middlemarch, li.

waveringly (wā′vėr-ing-li), n. In a wavering, vacillating, or irresolute manner.

Loke not wauueringly about you, haue no distrust, be not afrayd. J. Udall, On 1 Pet. v.

waveringness (wā′vėr-ing-nes), n. The character or state of a waverer; vacillation.

The waveringness of our cupidities turneth the minde into a diziness unawares to itself.
W. Montague, Devoute Essays, Pref.

waver-roller (wā′vėr-rō″lėr), n. In printing, a roller made to vibrate in a diagonal direction on the inking-table of a printing-machine for the purpose of distributing the ink.

wavery (wā′vėr-i), a. [< waver[1] + -y[1].] Wavering; unsteady; shaky; faltering.

Old letters closely covered with a wavery writing.
Miss Thackeray, Book of Sibyls, p. 4.

He's . . . wavery; . . . his love changes like the seasons. Christian Union, July 28, 1887.

wave-shell (wāv′shel), n. In earthquake-shocks, one of the waves of alternate compression and expansion, having theoretically the form of concentric shells, which are propagated in all directions through the solid materials of the earth's crust from the seismic focus to the earth's surface. Encyc. Brit., VII. 610.

waveson (wāv′son), n. [Appar. irreg. < wave[2], waive, + -son, after the analogy of flotson, jetson, jettison, otherwise flotsam, jetsam.] A name given to goods which after a shipwreck appear floating on the sea.

wave-surface (wāv′sėr″fās), n. A surface whose equation in rectangular coördinates is

$$x^2/(1-A^2r^2)+y^2/(1-B^2r^2)+z^2/(1-C^2r^2)=0.$$

If upon every central section of a quadric surface be erected a perpendicular at the center, and points be taken on this perpendicular at distances from the center equal to the axes of the section, then the locus of these points will be the wave-surface. It is frequently called Fresnel's wave-surface, to distinguish it from Huygens's wave-surface, which is simply an ellipsoid—the latter being the form of the wave-front of a uniaxial crystal, the former that of a biaxial crystal.—Malus's wave-surface (discovered by E. L. Malus (1775–1812) in 1810), a surface of the wave-front of light emanating from a point but undergoing reflections and refractions at different surfaces.

wave-trap (wāv′trap), n. In hydraulic engin., a widening inward of the spaces between piers, to afford space to permit waves rolling in between the piers to lose force by spreading themselves.

wave-worn (wāv′wōrn), a. Worn by the waves.

The shore that o'er his wave-worn basis bow'd.
Shak., Tempest, ii. 1. 120.

wavey, wavy[2] (wā′vi), n.; pl. waveys, wavies -viz). [Cree wewe.] A goose of the genus Chen; a snow-goose.

Shooting Wavies on the little lakes with which this region [the Red River country] is dotted is said to be a favorite amusement of the sportsmen.
Sportsman's Gazetteer, p. 192.

Blue wavey, the blue-winged goose, Chen cærulescens.—Horned wavey, the smallest snow-goose, Chen (Exanthemops) rossi, which has at times the base of the bill studded with tubercles. It is exactly like the snow-goose in plumage, but no larger than a mallard, and inhabits arctic America, coming southward in migration. It was recognizably described under its present name by Hearne, but lost sight of for nearly a century, till brought again to notice, in 1861, by J. Cassin.—White wavey, the snow-goose. See cut under Chen.

Horned Wavey (Chen rossi).

wavily (wā′vi-li), adv. In a wavy manner, form, or direction.

Mr. Rappit, the hair-dresser, with his well-anointed coronal locks tending wavily upward.
George Eliot, Mill on the Floss, i. 9.

waviness (wā′vi-nes), n. The state or quality of being wavy or undulating.

waving-frame (wā′ving-frām), n. In printing, a frame which carries inking-rollers.

The frame which supports the inking-rollers, called the waving-frame, is attached by hinges to the general framework of the machine; the edge of the stereotype-plate cylinder is indented, and rubs against the waving-frame, causing it to vibrate to and fro, and consequently to carry the inking-rollers with it, so as to give them an unceasing traverse motion. Ure, Dict., III. 655.

wavy[1] (wā′vi), a. [< wave[1] + -y[1].] 1. Abounding in waves.

This said, she div'd into the wavy seas.
Chapman, Odyssey, iv. 569.

2. Undulating in movement or shape; waving: as, wavy hair.

Let her glad Vallies smile with wavy Corn.
Prior, Carmen Seculare (1700), st. 26.

The wavy swell of the soughing reeds.
Tennyson, Dying Swan.

3. In bot., undulating on the border or on the surface. See cut under repand.—4. In her., same as undé.—5. In entom., presenting a series of horizontal curves: noting marks or margins. It is distinct from waved; but the two epithets are somewhat loosely used, and are sometimes interchanged.—6. In zoöl., undulating; sinuous; waved; having waved markings.—Barry wavy. See barry[2].—Sword wavy. See sword[1].—Wavy respiration. Same as interrupted respiration (which see, under respiration).

wavy[2], n. See wavey.

wavy-barred (wâ′vi-bärd), a. Crossed with waving lines; undulated: as, the wavy-barred sable, a British moth. See sable, n., 7.

waw[1]†, n. [< ME. wawe, waze, waghe, waugh, a wave, < AS. wæg = OS. wāg = OFries. weg, wei = MD. waeghe = MLG. wāge = OHG. wāg (> F. vague), MHG. wāc, G. woge = Goth. wēgs, a wave; < AS. wegan, etc., bear, carry, move: see weigh, wag[1], and cf. waw[2].] A wave.

For, whiles they fly that Gulfes devouring jawes,
They on this rock are rent, and sunck in helples wawes.
Spenser, F. Q., II. xii. 4.

waw[2]†, v. t. [< ME. wawen, wazien, < AS. wagian, stir, move, = OHG. wagen, move, = Goth. wagjan, move; a secondary form of AS. wegan, etc., bear, carry: see weigh, and cf. waw[1].] To stir; move; wave.

What wenten ye out in to desert for to se? a reed wawid with the wynd? Wyclif, Luke vii. 24.

waw[3]†, n. [< ME. wawe, wagh, wag, wah, wowe, wough, wouh, < AS. wag, wah = OFries. wach = MD. weeghe = Icel. veggr = Sw. vägg = Dan. væg, a wall.] A wall. Piers Plowman (B), iii. 61.

waw[4] (wâ), v. i. [< ME. wawen; imitative; cf. waul, wawl.] To cry as a cat; waul.

wawah (wä′wä), n. Same as wow-wow. Encyc. Brit., IV. 57.

wawet, interj. and n. A Middle English form of woe.

wawl, v. i. See waul.

wawliet, a. An obsolete form of waly[1].

wawproos (wâ′prös), n. [Algonkian.] The American varying hare, Lepus americanus.

waw-waw (wä′wä), n. [W. Ind.] See Rajania.

wawy† (wâ′i), a. [< waw[1] + -y[1].] Abounding in waves; wavy.

I saw come over the wawy flood.
The Isle of Ladies, l. 697.

wax[1] (waks), v. i. [< ME. waxen, wexen (pret. wex, weex, wox, wax, weax, wæx, pl. wexen, woxen, pp. waxen, wexen, woxen), < AS. weaxan (pret. weóx, pp. geweaxen) = OS. wahsan = OFries. waxa = D. wassen = OHG. wahsan, MHG. wahsen, G. wachsen = Icel. vaxa = Sw. växa = Dan. voxe = Goth. wahsjan (pret. wōhs, pp. wahsans), grow, increase, wax; = Gr. αὐξάνειν, wax, Skt. √ vaksh, wax, grow; appar. an extension of the root seen in L. augere, increase, AS. ēacan, increase: see eke, and augment, auction, etc. Hence ult. wax[1], n., waist.] 1. To grow; increase in size; become larger or greater: as, the moon waxes and wanes.

So is pryde waxen
In religioun and in alle the rewme amonge riche and pore,
That preyeres haue no power the pestilence to lette.
Piers Plowman (B), x. 75.

Sothli the child wax, and was coumfortid, ful of wysdom; and the grace of God was in him. Wyclif, Luke ii. 40.

The childe he kepte and norisshed till it was feire well woxen, and that he myght ride after to court.
Merlin (E. E. T. S.), ii. 238.

A waxing moon, thot soon would wane.
Dryden, Pal. and Arc., iii. 649.

Thou shalt wax and he shall dwindle.
Tennyson, Boädicea.

2. To pass from one state to another; become; grow: as, to wax strong; to wax old.

And every man that ought hath in his cofre,
Lat him appere and wexe a philosofre.
Chaucer, Prol. to Canon's Yeoman's Tale, l. 284.

Now charity is waxen cold, none helpeth the scholar nor yet the poor. Latimer, Sermon of the Plough.

First he wox pale, and then wox red.
Scott, Thomas the Rhymer, iii.

The commander of Fort Casimir, when he found his martial spirit waxing too hot within him, would sally forth into the fields and lay about him most lustily with his sabre. Irving, Knickerbocker, p. 315.

Waxing kernels, enlarged lymph-nodes sometimes found in the groin in children: so called because supposed to be associated with growth.

wax[1] (waks), n. [< ME. wax, wexe (= MHG. wahs, increment, increase; also in comp., MD. wasdom = G. wachsthum, growth); from the verb.] 1†. Growth; increase; prosperity.

Ful nobley wele the almes yef and do;
Aboute hym gret wexe, fair store, and gret light.
Rom. of Partenay (E. E. T. S.), l. 653.

★2. A wood. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

wax[2] (waks), n. [< ME. wax, wex, < AS. weax = OS. wahs = OFries. wax = D. was = OHG. MHG. wahs, G. wachs = Icel. vax = Sw. vax = Dan. vox, wax; cf. Some compare L. viscum, mistletoe, bird-lime: see viscum.] 1. A thick, sticky substance secreted by bees, and used to build their cells; the material of honeycomb; beeswax. In its natural state it is of a dull-yellow color, and smells of honey. Its consistency varies with the temperature; it is ordinarily a pliable solid, readily melted. When purified and bleached, it becomes translucent white, is less tenacious, without taste or smell, and of a specific gravity a little less than that of water. It softens at 80° F., becoming extremely plastic, and retaining any form in which it may be molded, like clay or putty, and melts at 145° F. In chemical composition, wax consists of variable proportions of three substances, called myricin, cerolein, and cerotic acid. Wax is used for many purposes, both in its natural state and variously prepared. As bleached, and also then variously tinted, it is made into wax candles, which give a peculiarly soft light. In pharmacy it enters into the composition of various plasters, ointments, and cerates, as a vehicle for the active ingredients, and to confer upon the preparation a desired consistency. It has varied uses in the plastic arts, especially in the making of anatomical models, artificial flowers and fruits, casts and impressions of various kinds, etc.

This pardoner hadde heer as yelow as wex.
Chaucer, Gen. Prol. to C. T., l. 675.

I'll work her as I go; I know she's wax.
Beau. and Fl., Coxcomb, ii. 2.

The Effigies of his late Majesty King William III. of Glorious Memory is curiously done in Wax to the Life, Richly Drest in Coronation Robes.
Quoted in Ashton's Social Life in Reign of Queen Anne, I. 283.

2. One of various substances and products resembling beeswax in appearance, consistency, plasticity, and the like, or used for like purposes. (a) The substance worked up from the pollen of flowers by the hind legs of bees, and used to feed their larvæ; bee-bread, formerly supposed to be beeswax. (b) The substance secreted by various coccids or wax-scales, especially such as has commercial value. (See wax-insect, 1.) (c) The product of some other homopterous insects. (See wax-insect, 2.) This is more or less stringy and flocculent, and approaches in character the froth or spume of the spittle-insects, but in some cases is usable like beeswax. (d) The secretion of the sebaceous glands of the outer ear; cerumen; ear-wax. (e) A vegetable product which may be regarded as a concrete fixed oil, the principal varieties being Chinese wax, cow-tree wax, carnauba wax, and Japan wax. It may be obtained from the pollen of many flowers, and it forms a part of the green fecula of many plants, particularly of the cabbage. It appears as a varnish upon the fruit or the upper surface of the leaves of many trees, as the wax-palm and wax-myrtle. Also called vegetable wax. See cut under Myrica. See also wax-tree, and compounds below. (f) A mineral product, one of certain fossil hydrocarbons which occur in small quantities generally in the Carboniferous formation: called more fully mineral wax. The most familiarly known variety is ozocerite. (g) A substance used for sealing. See sealing-wax.

Quomodo. He will never trust his land in wax and parchment, as many gentlemen have done before him.
Easy. A by-blow for me.
Middleton, Michaelmas Term, iv. 1.

A letter! hum! a suspicious circumstance, to be sure! What, and the seal a true-lover's knot now, ha? or an heart transfixed with darts; or possibly the wax bore the industrious impression of a thimble.
Colman, Jealous Wife, i.

(h) A thick resinous substance, consisting of pitch, resin, and tallow, used by shoemakers for rubbing their thread.

3. A thick syrup produced by boiling down the sap of the sugar-maple tree, cooling on ice, etc. [Local, U. S.]—4. Dung of cattle. [Western U. S.]—5. In coal-mining, puddled clay, used for dams and stoppings.—Brazil wax. Same as carnauba wax.—Butter of wax. See butter[1].—Carnauba wax, a secretion of the young leaves of the carnauba palm, Copernicia cerifera, of Brazil, which is used in making candles and is exported in large quantities.—Chinese or China wax, a hard white wax, the product of a scale-insect. See pela and wax-insect, 1 (a).—Ear-wax. See def. 2 (d) and cerumen.—Grafting-wax, a mixture made of resin, beeswax, and linseed-oil, for coating the incisions made in a tree in grafting.—Ibota wax, a product in Japan of the shrub Ligustrum Ibota.—Japan wax, a wax obtained in Japan from the drupes of the wax-tree Rhus succedanea, by crushing, steaming, and pressing. It is used chiefly for candles, and largely exported. The fruit of the lacquer-tree, Rhus vernicifera, yields a still better wax.—Mineral wax. See def. 2 (f).—Nose of wax. See nose[1].—Paraffin wax, a white substance resembling wax, obtained chiefly from the distillation of petroleum, but also produced in the distillation of coal, wood, and other substances. It is a neutral, easily fusible substance, unaltered by acids or alkalis, and hence has a wide range of uses in the arts.—Vegetable wax, any wax of vegetable origin. See def. 2 (e). The name once denoted specifically myrtle-wax.—Wax dam, a dam of puddled clay.—Wax doll. See wax-doll.—Wax impression, in dentistry, a copy in wax of parts of the mouth, taken usually for the purpose of fitting the plate for artificial teeth.—Wax opal, a variety of common opal having a resinous wax-like luster.—Wax wall, a dam of puddled clay. [Leicestershire coal-field, Eng.]—White wax. (a) Bleached beeswax. (b) Chinese wax, or pela. (See also banking-wax, bottle-wax, myrtle-wax, ocuba-wax, sealing-wax.)

wax[2] (waks), v. [< ME. waxen, wexen; < wax[2], n.] I. trans. To treat with wax; smear or rub with wax; make waxy: as, to wax a thread; to wax the floor or a piece of furniture.

Tho tok I and wexede my label in maner of a peyre tables to resceyve distynctly the prikkes of my compas.
Chaucer, Astrolabe, ii. §. 40.

He held a long string in one hand, which he drew through the other hand incessantly, as he spoke, just as a shoemaker performs the motion of waxing his thread.
O. W. Holmes, The Atlantic, LXVI. 663.

Waxed end, in shoemaking, a thread the end of which has been stiffened by the use of shoemakers' wax, so as to pass easily through the holes made by the awl; also, a waxed thread terminating in a bristle, for the same purpose. Also reduced to wax-end.—Waxed paper. See paper.

II. intrans. To plaster with clay. [Leicestershire coal-field, Eng.]

wax[3] (waks), n. [Appar. < wax[2], v., taken in sense of 'rub,' hence 'beat, thrash.'] A rage; a passion. [Colloq.]

H. Kingsley, Ravenshoe, v.

wax-berry (waks′ber″i), n. The bayberry, Myrica cerifera.

waxbill (waks′bil), n. One of numerous small Old World birds of the family Ploceidæ and subfamily Spermestinæ, whose bills have a certain waxen appearance, due to the translucency of the horny covering, which may be white, pink, red, etc. The name appears to have attached more particularly to the members of the genus Estrelda in a broad sense, but is of extensive and varied application. The Java sparrow is a good example. (See cut under sparrow.) The original waxbill, first so named by Edwards in 1751, the waxbill grosbeak of Latham (1783), Loxia astrild of Linnæus, and now Estrelda astrilda, or Estrilda astrild, or Estrilda astrilda (for the name thus wavers in spelling), is a South African bird, ranging as far as Matabeleland on the east and Damaraland on the west coast. It has also been introduced in various places, and is a well-known cage-bird. It is scarcely over 4 inches long, the wing and tail each about 1¾ inches; the bill is bright-red; the eyes and feet are brown. The general aspect is that of a brown bird, but this ground-color is intricately varied with several other colors. The vent is black, and there is a crimson streak on each side of the head. The blue-breasted waxbill (E. cyanogastra), the orange-cheeked (E. melpoda), the red-bellied (E. rubriventris), the grenadier (Uræginthus granatinus), and various others are among the small exotic birds which form the dealer's stock of amadavats, senegals, blood-finches, strawberry-finches, paddy-birds, and the like.

Waxbill (Estrelda astrild).

wax-bush (waks′bůsh), n. Same as wax-weed.

wax-chandler (waks′chand″lėr), n. A maker or seller of wax candles. [Eng.]

wax-insect (waks'in″sekt), n. 1. One of various coccids or bark-lice which secrete wax; a wax-scale. Nearly all the Coccidæ secrete a kind of wax, but that of but few is abundant enough to be of commercial value. Specifically—(a) The Chinese wax-insect, Ericerus pela (formerly Coccus sinensis or C. pela), related to the cochineal bug. It furnishes most of the white wax of commerce, specified as Chinese wax and pela. This insect, a native of China, occurs upon plants of the genera Rhus, Ligustrum, Hibiscus, Celastrus, etc. The wax is said to be mainly secreted by the male. It is collected from the plants on which it is deposited, melted and clarified, and made into a very high class of candles used in China. It has been imported in England for the same purpose, but is too expensive for general use. (b) Any member of the genus Ceroplastes. The females secrete much wax, usually deposited on the body in regular plates. C. ceriferus is an Indian wax-scale; C. myricæ (an old Linnean species) is found at the Cape of Good Hope; C. floridensis is a wax-scale of Florida; C. cirripediformis is the barnacle-scale. (c) A scale of the genus Cerococcus, as C. quercus, which secretes large masses of bright-yellow wax upon the twigs of various oaks, as Quercus undulata, Q. agrifolia, and Q. oblongifolia, in Arizona and California. 2. One of various insects of the family Fulgoridæ, and of one of the genera Phenax, Lystra, and Flata. In the case of the species of Lystra, the wax is secreted in long white strings from the end of the abdomen. This wax is said to be used in the manufacture of candles in the East Indies and China.

wax-light (waks'līt), n. [= D. waslicht = G. wachslicht (cf. Icel. vaxljós, Sw. vaxljus, Dan. voxlys); as wax[2] + light[1].] A candle, taper, or night-light made of wax.

wax-scot† (waks'skot), n. A tax or money payment made by parishioners to supply the church with wax candles.

wax-tree (waks'trē), n. One of several trees, of different localities, the source of some kind of vegetable or insect wax. (a) The Japan wax-tree, specifically Rhus succedanea, a small tree originally from the Loochoo Islands, now extensively planted in Japan, especially on the borders of fields, for its small clustered berries, which yield by expression an excellent candle-wax. The lacquer-tree, Rhus vernicifera, yields a still better wax. (b) In China, one of several trees yielding the pela, or white wax (see wax[2]), which incrusts their twigs as the result of the puncture of an insect. One of the most important is a species of privet, Ligustrum lucidum; another is an ash, Fraxinus Chinensis. Ligustrum Ibota appears to furnish a variety of the same product. (c) A plant of the genus Vismia, which consists of trees and shrubs abounding in a yellow resinous juice. This is collected from some South American species, particularly V. Guianensis, and from its qualities is sometimes called American gamboge. (d) The Colombian varnish-tree, Elæagia utilis. (e) The wax-myrtle, Myrica cerifera. [Rare.]

A fragrant shrub, called the Anemiche by the Indians, had attracted the attention of the government. It is the wax-tree, or candle-berry (Myrica cerifera), of which the wax is used for making candles.
Gayarré, Hist. Louisiana, I. 520.

wax-weed (waks'wēd), n. An American herb, Parsonsia viscosissima (Cuphea viscosissima of Jacquin), sometimes designated as clammy cuphea. It is a branching plant with purple stems covered with extremely viscid hairs; the petals of the flowers are also purple. In full, blue wax-weed.

waxwing (waks'wing), n. An oscine passerine bird of the genus Ampelis (or Bombycilla), family Ampelidæ: so called because the secondary quills of the wings, and sometimes other feathers of the wings or tail, are tipped with small red horny appendages resembling sealing-wax. There are three species—the Bohemian waxwing or chatterer, A. garrulus, of the northern hemisphere generally, breeding in high latitudes, and migrating southward irregularly, sometimes in flocks of vast extent; the red-winged Japanese waxwing, A. phœnicoptera; and the smaller Carolina waxwing, cedar waxwing, cedar-bird, cedar-lark, cherry-bird, etc., of North America, A. cedrorum, the prib chatterer of Latham, 1785. The sealing-wax tips are the enlarged, hardened, and peculiarly modified prolongation of the shaft of the feather, composed of central and peripheral substances differing in the shape of the pigment cells, which contain abundance of red and yellow coloring matter. Their use is unknown.

Bohemian Waxwing (Ampelis garrulus).

waxwork (waks'wėrk), n. 1. Work in wax; especially, figures or ornaments made of wax; in ordinary usage, figures, as of real persons, usually of life-size, and more or less of deceptive resemblance, the heads, hands, etc., being in wax, and the rest of the figure so set up and clothed as to increase the imitative effect.

On Wednesday last Mrs. Goldsmith, the famous Woman for Waxwork, brought to Westminster Abbey the Effigies of that celebrated Beauty the late Duchess of Richmond, which is said to be the richest Figure that ever was set up in King Henry's Chapel.
Quoted in Ashton's Social Life in Reign of Queen Anne, [I. 283.

2. pl. A place where a collection of such figures is exhibited.—3. The climbing bittersweet, Celastrus scandens: so named on account of the waxy scarlet aril of the fruit. See Celastrus and staff-tree. Also called Roxbury waxwork.

waxworker (waks'wėr″kėr), n. 1. One who works in wax; a maker of waxwork.—2. A bee which makes wax.

wax-worm (waks'wėrm), n. The larva of the wax-moth.

waxy[1] (wak'si), a. [< wax[2] + -y[1].] 1. Resembling wax or putty in appearance, softness, plasticity, adhesiveness, or other properties; waxen; hence, pliable; yielding; impressionable.

That the softer waxy part of you may receive some impression from this discourse, let us close all with an application. Hammond, Works, III. 626.

Specifically—2. Noting certain complexions. (a) Pallid or blanched; of a translucent pallor, as in bloodlessness. (b) Of a dull, pasty, whitish color, sometimes inclining to the yellowishness of raw beeswax. This is a complexion almost diagnostic of the so-called scrofulous or cancerous diathesis, and of persons in whom the opium habit is confirmed and of long standing.
3. Made of wax; abounding in wax; waxed: as, a waxy dressing for leather.—Waxy degeneration. (a) Same as lardaceous disease (which see, under lardaceous). (b) A change of parts of the muscular fibers into a peculiar hyaline substance, which differs from lardacein; it occurs in certain cases of typhoid fever, meningitis, and other acute febrile disorders.—Waxy liver, kidney, spleen, etc., a liver, kidney, spleen, etc., which has undergone waxy degeneration.

waxy[2] (wak'si), a. [< wax[3] + -y[1].] Angry; wrathy; irate. [Slang.]

Send its rough wayward roots in all directions.
Smithson, Useful Book for Farmers, p. 32. (Encyc. Dict.)

=Syn. Wayward, Wilful, Contrary, Untoward, headstrong, intractable, unruly. The italicized words tend toward the same meaning by different ways. Wayward, by derivation, applies to one who turns away from what he is desired or expected to be or to do; but, from its seeming derivation, it has come to apply more often to one who turns toward ways that suit himself, whether or not they happen to be what others desire. Wilful suggests that the person is full of self-will, which asserts itself against those whose wishes ought to be deferred to or whose commands should be obeyed. Contrary and untoward express the same idea, the one in a positive, the other in a negative form. Contrary is an energetic word, expressing the idea that one takes, or is disposed to take, the course exactly opposite to that which he is expected or desired to take. Contrariness, when ingrained, becomes perverseness: as, a contrary disposition; a contrary fellow. This use of contrary is by many considered colloquial, but has the recommendation of figurative force. Contrary and untoward view the person as one to be managed; untoward views the person also as the object of mental or moral discipline: this perhaps through its use in Acts ii. 40. An untoward person is not responsive to persuasion, advice, influence, or requests; untoward circumstances are similarly such as do not help us in our plans. All these words imply that the only consistency in the person's conduct is in this self-willed independence of others' wishes or opposition to them, but untoward implies it least. See perverse.

way-warden (wā′wâr″dn), n. A keeper or surveyor of roads.

Woodcutter. Had'st best repent and mend thy ways.
Peasant. The way-warden may do that; I wear out no ways; I go across country.
Kingsley, Saint's Tragedy, ii. 6.

waywardly (wā′wȧrd-li), adv. In a wayward manner; frowardly; perversely.

waywardness (wā′wȧrd-nes), n. [< ME. weiwardnesse, perverseness; < wayward + -ness.] The character of being wayward; frowardness; perverseness.

wayz-goose†, n. [An erroneous spelling of wase-goose*, < wase[1] + goose.] 1. A stubble-goose; hence, a fat goose—that is, one ready to kill in harvest-time.—2. An entertainment given by an apprentice to his fellow-workmen, of which the goose was the crowning dish; hence, in recent times, a printers' annual dinner, the funds for which are collected by stewards regularly appointed by "the chapel."

we (wē), pron.; pl. of I[2]. [Early mod. E. also wee; < ME. we, < AS. wē = OS. wi = OFries. wi = D. wij = OHG. MHG. G. wir = Icel. vēr, vær = Sw. Dan. vi = Goth. weis, < Teut. wīz*, wis*, with appar. nom. suffix -s, prob. = Skt. vayam, we. The L. and Gr. forms are different; L. nos, pl. (including dual), = Gr. νώ, dual; Gr. ἡμεῖς, we, appar. belonging to the stem of ἐμέ, etc., me (see me[1]). In AS. wē had a dual, wit, which disappeared in the earliest ME. period. See I[2], me[1], our, and us.] I and another or others; I and he or she, or I and they: a personal pronoun, taking the possessive our or ours (see our[1]) and the objective (dative or accusative) us.

Go we now on goddes halue.
William of Palerne (E. E. T. S.), l. 2803.

How goes the day with us? O, tell me, Hubert.
Shak., K. John, v. 3. 1.

On the left hand left wee two little Islands.
Sandys, Travailes, p. 8.

It may be that the gulfs will wash us down;
It may be we shall touch the Happy Isles,
And see the great Achilles, whom we knew.
Tennyson, Ulysses.

We is sometimes, like they, vaguely used for society, people in general, the world, etc.; but when the speaker or writer uses we he identifies himself more or less directly with the statement; when he uses they he implies no such identification. Both pronouns thus used may be translated by the French on and the German man: as, we (or they) say, French on dit, German man sagt.

Yet seen too oft, familiar with her [vice's] face,
We first endure, then pity, then embrace.
Pope, Essay on Man, ii. 220.

The instances in which our feelings bias us in spite of ourselves are of hourly recurrence.
H. Spencer, Social Statics, p. 196.

Many tongues have a double first person plural, one inclusive and one exclusive of the person or persons addressed: one we which means 'I and my party,' as opposed to you; and one that means 'my party and yours,' as opposed to all third persons.
Whitney, Life and Growth of Lang., p. 219.

We is frequently used by individuals, as editors and authors, when alluding to themselves, in order to avoid the appearance of egotism which it is assumed would result from the frequent use of the pronoun I. The plural style is used also by kings and other potentates, and is said to have been first used in his edicts by King John of England; according to others, by Richard I. The French and German sovereigns followed the example about the beginning of the thirteenth century.

We charge you, on allegiance to ourself,
To hold your slaughtering hands.
Shak., 1 Hen. VI., iii. 1. 86.

We and us are sometimes misused for each other.

To poor we
Thine enmity 's most capital.
Shak., Cor., v. 3. 103.

Nay, no compliment: . . . Shall 's to dinner, gentlemen? Dekker and Webster, Northward Ho, ii. 2.

Our bodies themselves, are they simply ours, or are they us? W. James, Prin. of Psychol., I. 291.

We-uns (literally, we ones), we or us. [Dialectal, southern U. S.]

"Grind some fur we-uns ter-morrer?" asked Ab. "I'll grind yer bones, ef ye'll send 'em down," said Amos.
M. N. Murfree, Prophet of the Great Smoky Mountains, ix.

weabit, n. See way-bit.

weak (wēk), a. [< ME. weik, weyk, waik, wayk, a northern form (< Icel. veikr, veykr) taking the place of the southern form woke, woc, wake, wac, < AS. wac, waac, pliant, weak, easily bent, = OS. wēk = D. week = MLG. wēk, LG. week = OHG. weih, MHG. This weakling cry of children.
Harper's Mag., LXXXVI. 570.

weakly (wēk'li), a. [< ME. weikly* (cf. Icel. veikligr), earlier woclic, waclic, weakly, < AS. wāclic, weak, vain, mean, vile, < wāc, weak: see weak and -ly[1].] Weak; feeble; not robust: as, a weakly woman; a man of weakly constitution.

Those that are weakly, as Hypochondriacks and Hysterics.
Gideon Harvey, Vanities of Phil. and Physick (ed. 1702), vi.

When I came at the gate that is at the head of the way, the Lord of that place did entertain me freely; neither objected he against my weakly looks.
Bunyan, Pilgrim's Progress, ii.

weakly (wēk'li), adv. [< ME. wacliche, wocliche, < AS. waclīce, weakly, meanly, vilely, < wāclic, weak: see weakly.] In a weak manner, in any sense of the word weak.

If a shoemaker should have no shoes in his shop, but only work as he is bespoken, he should be weakly customed.
Bacon, Advancement of Learning, ii. 219.

weak-minded (wēk'mīn″ded), a. Of a weak mind; of feeble intellect; also, indicating weakness of mind.

The Duke of York . . . prevailed for a time, and fruitlessly endeavoured to bind a weak-minded king by pledges.
J. Gairdner, Richard III., i.

If he should go abroad, his mother might think he had some weak-minded view of joining Julia Dallow, and trying, with however little hope, to win her back.
H. James, Tragic Muse, xxxv.

weak-mindedness (wēk'mīn″ded-nes), n. The state or character of being weak-minded; irresolution; indecision.

In homicidal maniacal cases there may be melancholy or weak-mindedness from the outset and no maniacal excitement. Fortnightly Rev., N. S., XLIII. 449.

weakness (wēk'nes), n. [< ME. weikenes, weykenesse; cf. AS. wācnys, weakness, < wāc, weak: see weak and -ness.] The state or character of being weak, in any sense; also, a weak point.

Syn weikenes of wemen may not wele stryve,
Ne haue no might tawardes men maistries to fend.
Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), l. 3325.

I think it is the weakness of mine eyes
That shapes this monstrous apparition.
Shak., J. C., iv. 3. 276.

Weakness is a negative term, and imports the absence of strength. It is, besides, a relative term, and accordingly imports the absence of such a quantity of strength as makes the share possessed by the person in question less than that of some person he is compared to.
Bentham, Introd. to Morals and Legislation, vi. 8, note.

It is one of the prime weaknesses of a democracy to be satisfied with the second-best if it appear to answer the purpose tolerably well, and to be cheaper—as it never is in the long run. Lowell, Harvard Anniversary, 1886.

weak-sighted (wēk'sī″ted), a. Having weak sight. A. Tucker.

weak-spirited (wēk'spir″i-ted), a. Having a weak or timorous spirit; pusillanimous. Scott.

Cf. wealth.] 1. Wealth; riches; hence, prosperity; success; happiness; well-being; the state of being well or prosperous: as, come weal or woe.

Unwise is he that can no wele endure.
Chaucer, Envoy of Chaucer to Bukton, l. 27.

And of this ye seide full trewe that moche wele and moche woo haue we suffred to-geder.
Merlin (E. E. T. S.), iii. 555.

In our olde vulgare, profite is called weale.
Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, i. 1.

I sing the happy Rusticks weal,
Whose handsom house seems as a Common-weal.
Sylvester, tr. of Du Bartas's Weeks, i. 3.

Glad I submit, whoe'er, or young or old,
Ought, more conducive to our weal, unfold.
Pope, Iliad, xiv. 119.

2†. The state: properly in the phrases common weal, public weal, general weal, meaning primarily 'the common or public welfare,' but used (the first now as a compound word) to designate the state (in which weal used alone is an abbreviation of commonweal).

A publike weale is a body lyuyng, compacte or made of sondry astates and degrees of men, whiche is disposed by the ordre of equite, and gouerned by the rule and moderation of reason. Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, i. 1.

The charters that you bear
I' the body of the weal. Shak., Cor., ii. 3. 189.

The public, general, or common weal, the interest, well-being, or prosperity of the community, state, or society.

weal[1]† (wēl), v. t. [< weal[1], n.] To promote the weal or welfare of. Fletcher (and another), False One, iv. 3.

weal[2] (wēl), n. and v. Same as wale[1].

weal[3]†, n. Same as weel[2].

weal[4] (wēl), v. i. [Origin obscure.] To be in woe or want. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

weal-balanced, a. An original misprint, in the following passage, of well-balanced, corrected by some editors, but retained by some, and absurdly explained as "balanced with regard to the common weal or good."

By cold gradation and well-balanced form
We shall proceed with Angelo.
Shak., M. for M., iv. 3. 104.

Weald (wēld), n. [< late ME. weeld, appar. an irreg. form of wild (formerly pron. wild), early mod. E. wilde, wylde, found in same sense, confused by later writers with ME. wald, wold, wæld, < AS. weald, a forest: see wold[1]. The proper E. form of AS. weald is wold (parallel with bold, fold, hold, sold, told, etc.). The mod. spelling weald represents the earlier weeld, and has nothing to do with AS. weald, unless it is due to Verstegan, who affected the "restitution" of old forms.] 1. The name given in England to an oval-shaped area, bounded by a line topographically well marked by an escarpment of the Chalk, which begins at Folkestone Hill, near the Straits of Dover, and passes through the counties of Kent, Surrey, Hants, and Sussex, meeting the sea again at Beachy Head. It embraces the southwestern part of Kent, the southern part of Surrey, the north and northeastern half of Sussex, and a small part of the eastern side of Hampshire. These are the limits of the area now known to geologists as the Weald; but, according to the English Geological Survey, it is probable that the area anciently designated by that name was somewhat smaller than this, having been bounded by the escarpment of the Lower Greensand, which is approximately concentric with that of the Chalk, but inside and distant from five to ten miles from it. This latter escarpment is, however, in places rather ill-defined, so that there the boundary of the ancient Weald was doubtful. The geology of the Weald is extremely interesting, hence the name has become very familiar. The formations covering the Weald proper are known as the Wealden (which see). The Weald was originally partly covered with forests and partly destitute of them.

The Historie of this Hogheard, presenteth to my minde an opinion, that some men mainteine touching this Weald: which is that it was a great while togither in manner nothing els but a desart, and waste Wildernesse, not planted with Townes, or peopled with men, as the outsides of the shyre were, but stored and stuffed with heards of Deere, and droues of Hogs only. Which conceit, though happily it may seem to many but a Paradoxe, yet in mine owne fantaisie, it wanteth not the feete of sound reason to stand upon.
Lambarde, A Perambulation of Kent (1596), p. 211.

We know that the Weald proper, or that part of the country below the Lower Greensand escarpment, was the part latest cultivated. Even as late as Elizabeth's time swine are said to have run wild here.
Topley, Geol. of the Weald, p. 398.

2. [l. c.] Any open country. [Rare, and mostly in poetry.]

But she to Almesbury Fled all night long by glimmering waste and weald.
Tennyson, Guinevere.

Wealden (wēl'dn), a. and n. [Irreg. < Weald + -en[2].] I. a. Of or pertaining to the Weald.

II. n. In geol., the name of a formation extensively developed in the Weald of England (see Weald), and interesting from its position and organic remains. Its geological age is Lower Cretaceous. The deposits of the Wealden, which have a total thickness of 2,000 feet, precisely resemble those of a modern delta, and the organic remains include land-plants, fresh-water shells, and a few estuarine or marine forms, as also dinosaurs, plesiosaurs, and pterodactyls. The Wealden is separated into two divisions: the Weald Clay, at the top, about 1,000 feet thick, and the Hastings Sand group beneath, which is subdivided, in descending order, as follows: Tunbridge Wells Sand, 120 to 380 feet thick; Wadhurst Clay, 120 to 180 feet; and Ashdown Sand, 400 to 500 feet. The Wealden is overlain conformably by the Lower Greensand.

wealdish† (wēl'dish), a. [< Weald, the Weald, + -ish[1].] Of or belonging to a weald, especially [cap.] to the Weald of Kent, Surrey, and Sussex.

The Wealdish men. Fuller, Worthies, Kent, II. 111.

wealful† (wēl'fûl), a. [< ME. welful, weoleful; < weal[1] + -ful.] Successful; prosperous; happy; joyous; felicitous.

For thow ne wost what is the ende of thinges, forthy domesthow that felonos and wykked men ben myhty and weleful. Chaucer, Boëthius, i. prose 6.

To tell the jerkes with joy that joy do bring
Is both a wealefull and a wofull thing.
Davies, Holy Roode, p. 13. (Davies.)

wealfulness† (wēl'fûl-nes), n. [< ME. welefulnesse; < wealful + -ness.] Prosperity; success; happiness.

Chaucer, Boëthius, i. prose 8.

weal-public† (wēl'pub″lik), n. The state; the commonwealth; the body politic; the public weal: properly two words, like body politic.

If you can find in your heart so to appoint and dispose yourself that you may apply your wit and diligence to the profit of the weal-public.
Sir T. More, Utopia (tr. by Robinson), i.

What is all this, either here or there, to the temporal regiment of Wealpublick, whether it be Popular, Princely, or Monarchical? Milton, Reformation in Eng., ii.

weals-man† (wēlz'man), n. [< weal's, poss. of weal[1], + man.] A statesman.

Meeting two such wealsmen as you are—I cannot call you Lycurguses—if the drink you give me touch my palate adversely, I make a crooked face at it.
Shak., Cor., ii. 1. 59.

wealth (welth), n. [< ME. welthe, weolthe = MD. welde, D. weelde = MLG. welde, LG. weelde = OHG. welida, welitha, wealth; as weal[2] + -th[1]. Cf. health, dearth, etc.] 1†. Weal; prosperity; well-being; happiness; joy.

For I am fallen into helle
From paradys and welthe.
Rom. of the Rose, l. 4137.

I schall go to my fadir that I come froo,
And dwelle with hym wynly in welthe all-way.
York Plays, p. 265.

Let no man seek his own, but every man another's wealth [but each his neighbour's good, R. V.]. 1 Cor. x. 24.

Grant her in health and wealth long to live.
Book of Common Prayer [Eng.], Prayer for the Queen.

2. Riches; valuable material possessions; that which serves, or the aggregate of those things which serve, a useful or desired purpose, and which are not available in quantities sufficient to satisfy completely all desire for them; especially, large possessions; abundance of worldly estate; affluence; opulence.

It shall then be given out that I'm a gentlewoman of such a birth, such a wealth, have had such a breeding, and so forth. Dekker and Webster, Northward Ho, i. 2.

Get place and wealth—if possible, with grace;
If not, by any means, get wealth and place.
Pope, Imit. of Horace, I. i. 103.

Wealth, in all commercial states, is found to accumulate.
Goldsmith, Vicar, xix.

Things for which nothing could be obtained in exchange, however useful or necessary they may be, are not wealth in the sense in which the term is used in Political Economy. J. S. Mill, Pol. Econ., Prelim. Rem.

Senior, again, has admirably defined wealth, or objects possessing value, as "those things, and those things only, which are transferable, are limited in supply, and are directly or indirectly productive of pleasure or preventive of pain." Jevons, The Theory of Polit. Econ., p. 175.

3. Affluence; profusion; abundance.

Again the feast, the speech, the glee,
The shade of passing thought, the wealth
Of words and wit.
Tennyson, In Memoriam, Conclusion.

Active wealth. See active capital, under active. = Syn. 2. Affluence, Riches, etc. See opulence.

wealthful† (welth'fûl), a. [< wealth + -ful.] Full of wealth or happiness; prosperous. Sir T. More.

3. The act of wearing away or passing.

Now again in a half-month's wearing goes Sigrid into the wild. William Morris, Sigurd, i.

wearing (wãr'ing), p. a. Wasting; consuming; exhausting; tiring: as, wearing suspense or grief.

wearing-apparel (wãr'ing-a-par″el), n. Garments worn, or made for wearing; dress in general.

wear-iron (wãr'ī″ėrn), n. A friction-guard, consisting of a plate of iron or steel, set on the surface or edge of a softer material to prevent abrasion, as on the edge of the body of a wagon, to prevent the forward wheels from wearing, grinding, or scraping the body in turning. Also wear-plate.

wearish† (wēr'ish), a. [Also weerish, werish, warish; origin uncertain; some confusion with weary[1], and perhaps with waterish, appears to exist.] 1. Insipid; tasteless; weak; washy.

Werysshe, as meate is that is nat well tastye — . . . mal sauoré. Palsgrave, p. 328.

As werishe and as vnsauery as beetes.
Udall, tr. of Apophthegms of Erasmus, p. 118. (Davies.)

2. Withered; wizen; shrunk.

A wretched wearish elfe. Spenser, F. Q., IV. v. 34.

A wearish hand,
A bloodless lip. Ford, Love's Sacrifice, v. 1.

A little, wearish old man, very melancholy by nature.
Burton, Anat. of Mel., To the Reader, p. 2.

wearishness†, n. Insipidity. Udall. (Davies.)

wearisome (wēr'i-sum), a. [< weary[1] + -some.] Causing weariness; tiresome; tedious; irksome; monotonous: as, a wearisome march; a wearisome day's work.

Alas, the way is wearisome and long!
Shak., T. G. of V., ii. 7. 8.

God had delivered their souls of the wearisome burdens of sin and vanity. Penn, Rise and Progress of Quakers, ii.

Few portions of Spanish literature show anything more stiff and wearisome than the long declamations and discussions in this dull fiction. Ticknor, Span. Lit., III. 88.

=Syn. Wearisome, Fatiguing, Tiresome, Tedious, Irksome, prolix, humdrum, prosy, dull. Wearisome and fatiguing are essentially the same in meaning and strength; they are equally appropriate whether the person acts or is acted upon: as, the old man was so deaf that it was equally wearisome (or fatiguing) to speak and to be spoken to. Tiresome is more often used where one is acted upon; in strength it is the same as wearisome. Tedious is stronger than wearisome, and suggests the need of constant effort of the will to do or to endure; the weariness may be physical or mental: as, a tedious task; a tedious headache; tedious garrulity. Tedious suggests commonly that one is acted upon; irksome suggests that one acts or is called upon to act, and implies also a peculiar reluctance. In Shak., 2 Hen. VI., ii. 1. 56, is an example of the rarer use of irksome to express a wearied shrinking from being acted upon: "How irksome is this music to my heart!" See fatigue, n., and tire[1], v. t.

wearisomely (wēr'i-sum-li), adv. In a wearisome manner; tediously; so as to cause weariness.

Pope's epigrammatic cast of thought led him to spend his skill on bringing to a nicer adjustment the balance of the couplet, in which he succeeded only too wearisomely well. Lowell, New Princeton Rev., I. 156.

wearisomeness (wēr'i-sum-nes), n. The quality or state of being wearisome; tiresomeness; tediousness: as, the wearisomeness of waiting long and anxiously.

That the wearisomnesse of the Sea may bee refreshed in this pleasing part of the Countrie.
Quoted in Capt. John Smith's Works, II. 6.

Continual plodding and wearisomeness.
Milton, Tetrachordon.

It would be difficult to realize the wearisomeness which reigned in the Conclave during so protracted a period.
J. H. Shorthouse, John Inglesant, xxx.

wear-plate (wār'plāt), n. Same as wear-iron.

weary[1] (wēr'i), a. [< ME. wery, weri, < AS. wērig = OS. wōrig (in comp.), weary, = OHG. wōrag, wuarag, drunken. Cf. AS. wōrian, wander, travel, roll, < wōr*, prob. a moor or wet place (> ME. wor: "wery so water in wore," 'dull as water in pool'), in comp. wōr-hana, a moorcock; cf. AS. wōs, also was, mire, wet, ooze: see wase[2], woose, ooze.] 1. Tired; exhausted by toil or exertion; having the endurance or patience worn out by continuous striving.

There nere is the place where that oure Lord rested him, whan he was wery for berynge of the Cros.
Mandeville, Travels, p. 80.

Estern tewysday to Suza to Diner, and the I rest me; for I was were, and my hors also, ffor the grett labor that I had the same mornyng in passing over the evyll and grevows mounte Senes.
Torkington, Diarie of Eng. Travell, p. 3.

Let us not be weary in well doing. Gal. vi. 9.

When they will they work, and sleep when they are weary. Sandys, Travailes, p. 14.

I see you are weary, and therefore I will presently wait on you to your chamber.
Cotton, in Walton's Angler, ii. 235.

The stag-hounds, weary with the chase,
Lay stretched upon the rushy floor.
Scott, L. of L. M., i. 2.

2. Impatient of or discontented with the continuance of something painful, exacting, irksome, or distasteful, and willing to be done with it; having ceased to feel pleasure (in something).

In the exercise and study of the mind they be never weary. Sir T. More, Utopia (tr. by Robinson), ii. 7.

Weary of the world, away she hies,
And yokes her silver doves.
Shak., Venus and Adonis, l. 1189.

I think she is weary of your tyranny,
And therefore gone. Fletcher, Pilgrim, ii. 1.

He is weary of the old wooden houses, the mud and dust, the dead level of site and sentiment, the chill east wind, and the chillest of social atmospheres.
Hawthorne, Scarlet Letter, Int., p. 11.

3. Causing fatigue; tiresome; irksome: as, a weary journey; a weary life.

How weary, stale, flat, and unprofitable Seem to me all the uses of this world!
Shak., Hamlet, i. 2. 133.

Their dusty palfreys and array
Showed they had marched a weary way.
Scott, Marmion, i. 8.

Most weary seem'd the sea, weary the oar,
Weary the wandering fields of barren foam.
Tennyson, Lotos-Eaters.

4. Feeble; sickly; puny. Forby; Jamieson. [Prov. Eng. and Scotch.]=Syn. Disgusted, wearisome. See weary[1], v.

weary[1] (wēr'i), v.; pret. and pp. wearied, ppr. wearying. [< ME. werien, < AS. wērigean, gewērigean, weary, fatigue, < wērig, weary: see weary[1], a.] I. trans. 1. To make weary; reduce or exhaust the physical strength or endurance of; fatigue; tire: as, to weary one's self with striving.

The people shall weary themselves for very vanity.
Hab. ii. 13.

They in the practice of their religion wearied chiefly their knees and hands, we especially our ears and tongues.
Hooker, Eccles. Polity, v. 81.

2. To exhaust the endurance, patience, or resistance of, as by persistence or importunity.

I stay too long by thee, I weary thee.
Shak., 2 Hen. IV., iv. 5. 94.

I have even wearied heaven with prayers.
Ford, 'Tis Pity, i. 3.

Watchful I'll guard thee, and with Midnight Pray'r Weary the Gods to keep thee in their Care.
Prior, Henry and Emma.

To weary out. (a) To exhaust or subdue by something fatiguing or irksome.

Like an Egyptian Tyrant, some Thou weariest out in building but a Tomb.
Cowley, The Mistress, Thraldom.

She surceased not, day nor night,
To storm me over-watch'd and wearied out.
Milton, S. A., l. 405.

(b) To pass wearily. [Rare.]

The land of Italy:
There wil I waile, and weary out my dayes in wo.
The Merchant's Daughter (Child's Ballads, IV. 329).

=Syn. 1. Fatigue, Jade, etc. See tire[1].

II. intrans. 1. To become weary, tired, or fatigued.

She was nae ten miles frae the town,
When she began to weary.
Lizae Baillie (Child's Ballads, IV. 74).

2. To become impatient or surfeited, as with the continuance of something that is monotonous, irksome, or distasteful.

Sing the simple passage o'er and o'er
For all an April morning, till the ear
Wearies to hear it.
Tennyson, Lancelot and Elaine.

3. To long; languish: with for before the object.

The pair took home schoolboy meals in paper-bags, subsisting upon buns and canned meats, and wearying for the taste of a hot broiled steak. The Century, XXXVII. 775.

weary[2] (wēr'i), n. [< weary*[2], v., var. of wary[2], curse: see wary[2].] A curse: used now only in the phrases Weary fa' you! Weary on you! and the like. Scott. [Scotch.]

weasand (wē'zand), n. [Also weazand, and formerly wesand, wezand, also dial. wezzen, wizen, wizzen, and wosen; < ME. wesand, wesande, waysande, wesaunt, < AS. wǣsend, also wāsend (> E. dial. wosen) = OFries. wāsende, wāsande, weasand, windpipe, = OHG. weisunt, MHG. weisant (E. Müller), weasand; cf. G. dial. (Bav.) waisel, wasel, wasling, the gullet of ruminating animals. The word (AS. wāsend) has the form of a present participle, and some have attempted to connect it with wheeze; this involves the assumption that the rare AS. verb hwēsan (pret. hweós), wheeze, = Icel. hvæsa, hiss, = Dan. hvæse, hiss, wheeze (not found in OHG., etc.), gave rise to a noun hwēsend*, varying to hwǣsend*, hwāsend*, meaning 'the wheezing thing,' that this name was applied to all windpipes (most of which never wheeze), and that subsequently the initial consonant in hw- fell away, a phenomenon wholly unknown in other AS. words in hw-, and not recognized even in mod. English except in dialectal use.] The windpipe; the pipe or tube through which air passes to and from the lungs in respiration; the trachea. See trachea[1] and larynx.

Should I have named him? Nay, they should as soon have this weasand of mine.
Latimer, 2d Sermon bef. Edw. VI., 1550.

Had his wesand bene a little widder.
Spenser, Shep. Cal., September.

Give me a razor there, that I may scrape his weesand, that the bristles may not hinder me when I come to cut it.
Dryden, The Mock Astrologer, V. i.

You may have a pot of porter, or two—but neither wine nor spirits shall wet your wizen this night, Tickler.
Noctes Ambrosianæ, Feb., 1832.

wease-allan (wēz'al$^{\prime}$an), n. See weese-allen.

weasel (wē'zl), n. [Formerly also weazel, weesel; < ME. wesel, wesele, wesile, wezele, < AS. wesle = D. wesel, wezel (dim. weselke, wezeltje) = OHG. wisala, MHG. wisel, wiscle, G. wiesel = Icel. vīsla (in comp. hreysi-vīsla) = Sw. vesla, vässla = Dan. væsel, a weasel; origin uncertain.] 1. A small carnivorous digitigrade mammal of the restricted genus Putorius, of the family Mustelidæ, related to the stoat or ermine, ferret, and polecat of the same genus, and less intimately to the marten or sable of the genus Mustela of the same family. The species to which the name is most frequently or especially applied is P. vulgaris, the common weasel of Europe and of most of the cold and temperate parts of the eastern hemisphere, distinguished by the comparative length and extreme slenderness of the body, and very small size, being only some six or eight inches long, with a tail of two inches in length, or less; the color is reddish-brown above, and white below; the tail is of the same color as the body, and not tipped with black. In northerly regions it turns white in winter, like the ermine. It feeds on rats, mice, moles, shrews, small birds and their eggs, and insects; and, though itself classed as vermin by gamekeepers, it is often serviceable as a destroyer of vermin in ricks, barns, and granaries, its small size and lithe, sinuous body enabling it to penetrate almost everywhere. Its cunning and wariness are proverbial in the expression to catch a weasel asleep—that is, to do an extremely difficult thing by strategy, finesse, or unexpected action. Other species of Putorius, properly called weasels, inhabit many parts of the world, and the name has loosely attached to various animals of different families, some of which applications are noted in phrases below. The common species of the United States are P. cicognanii and P. noveboracensis, but several other species occur in North America.

Common Weasel (Putorius vulgaris).

Fair was this yonge wyf, and therwithal
As any wezele hir body gent and smal.
Chaucer, Miller's Tale, l. 48.

I can suck melancholy out of a song as a weasel sucks eggs: More, I prithee, more.
Shak., As you Like it, ii. 5. 13.

2†. The weasel-coot.—3. A lean, mean, sneaking, greedy fellow.

The weasel Scot
Comes sneaking, and so sucks her princely eggs.
Shak., Hen. V., i. 2. 170.

Four-toed weasel†, the African zenik or suricate, a viverrine, formerly Rhyzæna tetradactyla. See cut under suricate.—Malacca weasel. Same as rassel. See cut under Viverrinæ.—Mexican weasel. Same as kinkajou (which see, with cut).—Pouched weasel. See pouched, and cut under Phascogale.

weasel-cat (wē'zl-kat), n. The linsang, Prionodon gracilis. See cut under delundung.

weasel-coot (wē'zl-kōt), n. The so-called red-headed smew. This is the female or young male of Mergellus albellus (the adult male of which is figured under smew). The implication of the term weasel appears to be the musteline or foxy color of the head. An old name of this or a similar merganser was Mergus mustelinus, and one used by Sir T. Browne was Mustela variegata. The same adjective with the same meaning occurs in Turdus mustelinus, the present name of the wood-thrush of the United States, and in several other specific designations of animals, as in Lepilemur mustelinus, the weasel-lemur. Compare weaser.

weasel-duck (wē'zl-duk), n. Same as weasel-coot.

weasel-faced (wē'zl-fāst), a. Having a thin, sharp face like a weasel's. Steele.

weasel-fish (wē'zl-fish), n. The three-bearded rockling, or whistle-fish. See whistle-fish.

weasel-lemur (wē'zl-lē$^{\prime}$mėr), n. A small lemur, Lepilemur mustelinus.

weaselling†, n. [Also weazelling; < weasel + ling[1].] A kind of rockling, probably the five-bearded, Motella mustela.

weaselmonger† (wē'zl-mung$^{\prime}$gėr), n. A rat-catcher; one who hunts rats, etc., with weasels.

This weaselmonger, who is no better than a cat in a house, or a ferret in a conygat [rabbit-burrow].
Peele, Speeches to Queen Elizabeth at Theobalds, ii.

weasel-snout (wē'zl-snout), n. The yellow dead-nettle, Lamium Galeobdolon: so called from the shape of the corolla. See Galeobdolon.

weasel-spider (wē'zl-spī$^{\prime}$dėr), n. A book-name of any arachnidan of the family Galeodidæ. See cut under Solpugida.

weaser (wē'zėr), n. [Cf. weasel-coot.] The American merganser or sheldrake, Mergus americanus. J. P. Giraud, 1844; G. Trumbull, 1888. Also wheaser and tweezer. [Long Island.]

weasiness† (wē'zi-nes), n. The state or condition of being weasy. Joye.

weasy† (wē'zi), a. [Appar. for weesy*, a dial. var. of woosy, an earlier form of oozy (like weese, woose, for ooze).] Gluttonous; sensual. ★Joye.

weather (weTH'ėr), n. and a. [Early mod. E. also wether; with alteration of orig. d to th (as also in father, mother, prob. under Scand. influence; cf. Icel. vedhr), < ME. weder, wedir, < AS. weder, weather, wind, = OS. wedar, weder = OFries. weder = D. weder, contracted weer = OHG. wetar, MHG. weter, G. wetter (cf. also G. ge-witter, a storm) = Icel. vedhr = Sw. väder, wind, air, weather, = Dan. veir, weather, wind, air (not found in Goth.). Cf. OBulg. vedro, good weather, vedrŭ, bright, clear; cf. also OBulg. vietrŭ, air, wind; akin to wind, from the root of Goth. waian, Skt. √ vā, blow: see wind[2].] I. n. 1†. Wind; storm; tempest.

Now welcome somer, with thy sunne softe,
That hast this wintres wedres overshake.
Chaucer, Parliament of Fowls, l. 685.

Aye the wynde was in the sayle,
Over fomes they flet withowtyn fayle,
The wethur then forth gan swepe.
Le Bone Florence (Ritson's Metr. Rom., III.).

What gusts of weather from that gathering cloud
My thoughts presage! Dryden, Æneid, v. 19.

2†. Cold and wet.

Seynge this bysshop with his company syttyng in the weder, desyred hym to his howse. Fabyan, Chron., lxxxiii.

And, if two Boots keep out the Weather,
What need you have two Hides of Leather?
Prior, Alma, iii.

3†. A light rain; a shower. Wyclif, Deut. xxxii. 2.—4. The state of the air or atmosphere with respect to its cloudiness, humidity, motions, pressure, temperature, electrical condition, or any other meteorological phenomena; the atmospheric conditions prevailing at any moment over any region of the earth: as, warm or cold weather; wet or dry weather; calm or stormy weather; fair or foul weather; cloudy or hazy weather. The investigation of the various causes which determine the state of the atmosphere and produce the changes which are incessantly taking place in its condition forms the subject of meteorology. The average condition of the weather for a considerable period constitutes climate, and the statistical compilation of meteorological observations forms the basis of climatology.

Men may see the Walles when it is fayr Wedre and cleer.
Mandeville, Travels, p. 101.

A! lorde, what the wedir is colde!
The fellest freese that euere I felyd.
York Plays, p. 114.

They . . . wolde ride in the cole of the mornynge that was feire and stille and a softe weder, and thei were yonge and tender to suffre grete trauayle.
Merlin (E. E. T. S.), ii. 191.

Gentlewomen, the weather's hot; whither walk you?
B. Jonson, Bartholomew Fair, iii. 1.

Horrible weather again to-day, snowing and raining all day. Sydney Smith, To Mrs. Sydney Smith.

5. Specifically, in weather-maps and -reports, the condition of the sky as to cloudiness and the occurrence of precipitation.—6. Change of the state of the atmosphere; meteorological change; hence, figuratively, vicissitude; change of fortune or condition.

It is a reverend thing to see an ancient castle . . . not in decay; how much more to behold an ancient noble family which hath stood against the waves and weathers of time! Bacon, Nobility.

But my Substantial Love
Of a more firm and perfect Nature is;
No Weathers can it move.
Cowley, The Mistress, Coldness.

7. The inclination or obliquity of the sails of a windmill to the plane of revolution.—Angle of weather. See angle[3].—Clerk of the weather. See clerk.—Merry weather†. See merry[1].—Soft weather. (a) A thaw. [New Eng.] (b) An enervating atmosphere.—To make fair weather†, to conciliate or flatter, as by fair words and shows of friendship.

I must make fair weather yet awhile,
Till Henry be more weak and I more strong.
Shak., 2 Hen. VI., v. 1. 30.

To make good or bad weather (naut.). See make[1].—Under the weather, indisposed; ill; ailing: a condition caused or influenced by the state of the weather. [Colloq.]

Since I went to Washington, and until within ten days, I have been quite under the weather, and I have had to neglect everything. S. Bowles, in Merriam, II. 49.

Weather Bureau, a bureau of the Department of Agriculture, having charge of the forecasting of weather, the issue of storm, cold-wave, frost, and flood warnings, the gaging and reporting of rivers, the maintenance of the Bureau telegraph and telephone lines, the collection and transmission of marine intelligence for the benefit of commerce and navigation, the taking of meteorological observations for establishing the climatic conditions of the United States, and the distribution of meteorological information for the benefit of agriculture and commerce. From 1871 to 1891 these duties were performed by the signal service of the army.

II. a. Naut., toward the wind; windward: opposed to lee: as, weather bow; weather beam; weather rigging.—Weather anchor, the anchor, lying to windward, by which a ship rides when moored.—Weather helm, quarter, tide. See the nouns.

weather (weᴛʜ′ėr), v. [< ME. wederen, < AS. wederian, wedrian, expose to the air, indicate the weather; cf. AS. wedrian = Sw. vädra, expose to the air, air, scent, smell, snuff the air, = Dan. vejre, air, scent; from the noun.] I. trans. 1. To air; expose to the air; dry or otherwise affect by exposure to the open air. [Rare.]

I fear me this land is not yet ripe to be ploughed; for, as the saying is, it lacketh weathering.
Latimer, Sermon of the Plough.

And then he pearcheth on some braunch thereby,
To weather him, and his moyst wings to dry.
Spenser, Muiopotmos, l. 184.

All barleys that have been weathered in the field, or have got mow-burnt or musty in the stack, should be rigidly rejected. Ure, Dict., III. 185.

Hawks are weathered by being placed unhooded in the open air. This term is applied to passage hawks which are not sufficiently reclaimed to be left out by themselves unhooded on blocks—they are weathered by being put out for an hour or two under the falconer's eye.
Encyc. Brit., IX. 7.

2. To affect injuriously by the action of weather; in geol., to discolor or disintegrate: as, the atmospheric agencies that weather rocks.—3. In tile-manuf., to expose (the clay) to a hot sun or to frost, in order to open the pores and separate the particles, that it may readily absorb water and be easily worked.—4. To slope (a surface), that it may shed water.—5. Naut.: (a) To sail to windward of: as, to weather a point or cape.

We weathered Pulo Pare on the 29th, and stood in for the main. Cook, First Voyage, iii. 13.

(b) To bear up against and come safely through: said of a ship in a storm, as also of a mariner; hence, used in the same sense with reference to storms on land.

Here's to the pilot that weathered the storm. Canning.

Among these hills, from first to last,
We've weathered many a furious blast.
Wordsworth, The Waggoner, ii.

I weathered some weary snow-storms.
Thoreau, Walden, p. 275.

To sell the boat — and yet he loved her well;
How many a rough sea had he weather'd in her!
Tennyson, Enoch Arden.

6. Figuratively, to bear up against and overcome, as trouble or danger; come out of, as a trial, without permanent damage or loss.

You will weather the difficulties yet. F. W. Robertson.

The vitality and self-direction of the semi-Greek municipalities of the East in large measure weathered Roman rule, as did also the Greek speech and partially Hellenized life of Asia, Syria, and Egypt. W. Wilson, State, § 143.

To weather a point, to gain an advantage or accomplish a purpose against opposition.—To weather out, to hold out against to the end.

When we have pass'd these gloomy hours,
And weather'd out the storm that beats upon us.
Addison, Cato, iii. 2.

II. intrans. 1. To suffer a change, such as discoloration or more or less complete disintegration, in consequence of exposure to the weather or atmosphere. See weathering, 2.

The lowest bed is a sandstone with ferruginous veins; it weathers into an extraordinary honey-combed mass.
Darwin, Geol. Observations, ii. 426.

The granite commenced to weather, and weathered merrily on in spite of all technical and scientific commissions. Science, VII. 75.

2. To resist or bear exposure to the weather.

For outside work, boiled oil is used, because it weathers better than raw oil. Workshop Receipts, 2d ser., p. 436.

weather-beaten (weᴛʜ′ėr-bē″tn), a. [< weather + beaten. In some of its uses perhaps a perverted spelling of weather-bitten, q. v.] Beaten or marred by the weather; seasoned or hardened by exposure to all kinds of weather: as, a weather-beaten sailor.

She enjoyes sure peace for evermore,
As wetherbeaten ship arryv'd on happie shore.
Spenser, F. Q., II. i. 2.

Summer being ended, all things stand in appearance with a weather-beaten face.
N. Morton, New England's Memorial, p. 35.

The weather-beaten form of the scout.
J. F. Cooper, Last of Mohicans, xxix.

weather-bitt (weᴛʜ′ėr-bit), v. t. To take an extra turn of (a cable) about the bitts or the end of the windlass in bad weather.

weather-bitten (weᴛʜ′ėr-bit″n), a. [= Sw. väder-biten = Norw. vederbiten = Dan. veirbidt, weather-bitten; as weather + bitten. Cf. Norw. wederslitten, weather-slit, weather-worn. Cf. weather-beaten.] Worn, marred, or defaced by exposure to the weather.

The old shepherd . . . stands by, like a weather-bitten conduit of many kings' reigns. Shak., W. T., v. 2. 60.

weather-blown (weᴛʜ′ėr-blōn), a. Weather-beaten; weather-stained. Chapman, Iliad, ii. 532.

weather-board (weᴛʜ′ėr-bōrd), n. [= Icel. vetherbordh, the windward side; as weather + board.] 1. Naut.: (a†) That side of a ship which is toward the wind; the windward side. (b) A piece of plank placed in a ship's port when she is laid up in ordinary, inclined so as to turn off rain without preventing the circulation of air.—2. A board used in weather-boarding.

weather-board (weᴛʜ′ėr-bōrd), v. t. [< weather-board, n.] To nail boards upon, as a roof or wall, lapping one over another, in order to turn off rain, snow, etc.

It was a building of four rooms, constructed of hewn logs and weather-boarded at the joints.
The Century, XXXVIII. 408.

weather-boarding (weᴛʜ′ėr-bōr″ding), n. 1. A facing of thin boards, having usually a feather-edge, and nailed lapping one over another, used as an outside covering for the walls of a wooden building. They are practically the same as clapboards, but are distinguished from those by being larger and wider.—2. The finish or woodwork at the base of a clapboarded wall.—3. The whole exterior covering of a wall or roof, whether of weather-boards, clapboards, or shingles.—Weather-boarding clamp, gage, saw, etc., special forms of clamp, gage, saw, etc., used in applying or cutting out weather-boarding.

weather-bound (weᴛʜ′ėr-bound), a. Delayed by bad weather.

weather-box (weᴛʜ′ėr-boks), n. A form of hygroscope, in the shape of a toy-house, which roughly indicates weather changes by the appearance or retirement of toy images. In a common form a man advances from his porch in wet and a woman in dry weather — the movement being produced by the varying torsion of a hygroscopic string by which the images are attached. Also called weather-house.

The elder and younger son of the house of Crawley were, like the gentleman and lady in the weather-box, never at home together. Thackeray, Vanity Fair, x.

weather-breeder (weᴛʜ′ėr-brē″dėr), n. A fine serene day which precedes and prepares a storm.

"It's a beautiful day," said Whittaker. . . . "Yes, nice day," growled Adams, "but a weather-breeder." E. Eggleston, Roxy, xiii.

weather-cast (weᴛʜ′ėr-kâst), n. A forecast of the weather. [Rare.]

Admiral FitzRoy, in 1860, was enabled, aided by the electric telegraph, to inaugurate a system of storm-warnings and weather-casts.
R. Strachan, in Modern Meteorology, p. 84.

weather-caster (weᴛʜ′ėr-kâs″tėr), n. 1. One who computes the weather for almanacs.—2. ★A long-range weather-prophet.

weather-cloth (weᴛʜ′ėr-klôth), n. Naut.: (a) A covering of painted canvas for hammocks, boats, etc. (b) A tarpaulin placed in the weather rigging to make a shelter for officers and men on watch.

weathercock (weᴛʜ′ėr-kok), n. [< ME. wedercok, wedyrcokke, weddyrcoke, wedercoc, so called because the figure of a cock, as an emblem of vigilance, has from a very early time been a favorite form for vanes; cf. D. weerhaan = Sw. väderhane = Dan. veirhane, a weathercock, etc. (D. haan, etc., a cock).] 1. A vane or weather-vane; a pointing device, set on the top of a spire or other elevation, and turning with the wind, thus showing its direction. See cut under vane.

O jest unseen, inscrutable, invisible,
As a nose on a man's face, or a weather-cock on a steeple!
Shak., T. G. of V., ii. 1. 142.

They are Men whose Conditions are subject to more Revolutions than a Weather Cock, or the Uncertain Mind of a Fantastical Woman. Ward, London Spy.

His head . . . looked like a weather-cock, perched upon his spindle neck to tell which way the wind blew.
Irving, Sketch-Book, p. 420.

2. Figuratively, any thing or person that is easily and frequently turned or swayed; a fickle or inconstant person.

What pretty weathercocks these women are!
Randolph, Amyntas, i. 1.

The word which I have given shall stand like fate,
Not like the king's, that weather-cock of state.
Dryden, Conquest of Granada, I., iii. 1.

weathercock (weᴛʜ′ėr-kok), v. t. [< weather-cock, n.] To serve as a weathercock to or on. [Rare.]

Whose blazing wyvern weathercock'd the spire.
Tennyson, Aylmer's Field.

weather-contact (weᴛʜ′ėr-kon″takt), n. In teleg., leakage to neighboring wires or to earth, due to wet insulators.

weather-cross (weᴛʜ′ėr-krôs), n. In telegraph- and telephone-lines, a leakage from one line to another, caused by poor insulation, and brought about by wet or stormy weather.

weather-dog (weᴛʜ′ėr-dog), n. A fragmentary rainbow, popularly believed, especially in Cornwall, to be an indication of rain. [Prov. Eng.]

weather-driven (weᴛʜ′ėr-driv″n), a. [= Sw. väder-drifven, wind-driven; as weather + driven.] Driven by winds or storms; forced by stress of weather.

weathered (weᴛʜ′ėrd), p. a. 1. Discolored or disintegrated by the action of the elements:

said sometimes of surfaces of wood, but oftener of stones or rocks. Trees which show signs of having suffered from exposure to the weather, as many old ones do, are sometimes said to be weather-beaten, but rarely, if ever, to be weathered. See weathering, 2.

The bands of stratification . . . can be distinguished in many places, especially in Navarin Island, but only on the weathered surfaces of the slate.
Darwin, Geol. Observations, ii. 448.

The force of the wind is such as actually to loosen the weathered parts of the rock and dislodge them.
Geikie, Geol. Sketches, ii.

2. Seasoned by exposure to the air or the weather.—3. In arch., having a slope or inclination to prevent the lodgment of water: noting surfaces approximately or theoretically horizontal, as those of window-sills, the tops of cornices, and the upper surface of flat stone-work.

weather-eye (weᵺ'ėr-ī), n. The eye imagined to be specially used for the purpose of observing the sky in order to forecast the weather.—To keep one's weather-eye open or awake, to be on one's guard; have one's wits about one. [Colloq.]

Keep your weather eye awake, and don't make any more acquaintances, however handsome.
Dickens, Our Mutual Friend, ii. 5.

weather-fend (weᵺ'ėr-fend), v. t. [< weather + fend[1].] To shelter; defend from the weather. [Rare.]

The line-grove which weather-fends your cell.
Shak., Tempest, v. 1. 10.

weather-fish (weᵺ'ėr-fish), n. The mud-fish, thunder-fish, or misgurn of Europe, Misgurnus fossilis: regarded as a weather-prophet because it is supposed to come out of the mud, in which it habitually burrows, before a storm.

weather-gage (weᵺ'ėr-gāj), n. 1. Naut., the advantage of the wind; the position of a ship when she is to windward of another ship: opposed to lee-gage.

A ship is said to have the weather-gage of another when she is at the windward of her. Admiral Smyth.

Hence—2. Advantage of position; the upper hand.

Were the line
Of Rokeby once combined with mine,
I gain the weather-gage of fate!
Scott, Rokeby, vi. 24.

To dispute the weather-gage. See dispute.

weather-gall (weᵺ'ėr-gâl), n. Same as water-gall, 2.

weather-glass (weᵺ'ėr-glâs), n. [= D. weerglas = Sw. väderglas = Dan. veirglas, barometer; as weather + glass.] An instrument designed to indicate the state of the atmosphere. This word is commonly applied to the barometer, but also to other instruments for measuring atmospheric changes and indicating the state of the weather, as the thermometer and various kinds of hygroscopes.

The King of Spain's health is the Weather-glass upon which all our politicians look; as that rises or falls, we look pleasant or uneasy.
Prior (Ellis's Lit. Letters, p. 265).

Shepherd's or poor man's weather-glass. See shepherd.

weather-gleam (weᵺ'ėr-glēm), n. A peculiar appearance of clear sky near the horizon. [Prov. Eng.]

You have marked the lightning of the sky just above the horizon when clouds are about to break up and disappear. Whatever name you gave it, you would hardly improve on that of the weather-gleam, which in some of our dialects it bears. Trench. (Imp. Dict.) weather-hardened (weᵺ'ėr-härʺdnd), a. Hardened by the weather; weather-beaten.

A countenance which, weather-hardened as it was, might have given the painter a model for a Patriarch.
Southey, The Doctor, ix.

weather-head (weᵺ'ėr-hed), n. 1. A secondary rainbow. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]—2. Stripes of cirrus cloud. [Scotch.]

weather-headed† (weᵺ'ėr-hedʺed), a. Same as wether-headed.

Sir, is this usage for your son?—for that old weather-headed fool, I know how to laugh at him; but you, Sir—.
Congreve, Love for Love, ii. 7. (Davies.) weather-house (weᵺ'ėr-hous), n. Same as ★weather-box. Cowper, Task, i. 211.

weathering (weᵺ'ėr-ing), n. [< ME. wederyng; verbal n. of weather, v.] 1†. Weather, especially favorable or fair weather.

For alle trewe shipmen, and trewe pilgrymes, yat Godd for his grace yeue hem wederyng and passage, yat yei mowen sauely commen and gone.
English Gilds (E. E. T. S.), p. 23.

Which would haue bene, with the weathering which we had, ten or twelve dayes worke.
Hakluyt's Voyages, III. 515.

2. In geol., etc., the action of the elements in changing the color, texture, or composition of rock, in rounding off its edges, or gradually disintegrating it. The first effect of the weathering of rock-surfaces is discoloration. This arises in part from dust or dirt finding its way into the fissures, and is most quickly seen in large cities where much coal is burned. Discoloration often arises from the oxidation of some sulphur compound which the rock contains, and especially of iron pyrites, which is a widely disseminated mineral. Another very perceptible effect of weathering is the loss of the luster which many rock-constituents naturally have. This is particularly conspicuous in the case of feldspar, and is the result of incipient decomposition and hydration. Rounding of the edges of angular projections of the rock, or of its constituents, is another result of weathering, the decomposed minerals being more easily removed by the action of water than they were before decomposition. Weathering is a preliminary to erosion, but the rapidity with which these operations are carried on varies greatly with the nature of the rock and the climatic and other conditions to which it is subjected.

Many of them [nodules of various kinds] are, also, externally marked in the same direction with parallel ridges and furrows, which have not been produced by weathering.
Darwin, Geol. Observations, i. 78.

3. In arch., a slight inclination given to an approximately horizontal surface to enable it to throw off water.

weathering-stock† (weᵺ'ėr-ing-stok), n. A post to which hawks are leashed in such a manner as to allow them limited exercise. See last quotation under weather, v. t., 1.

E'en like the hawk (whose keeper's wary hands Have made a pris'ner to her weath'ring stock).
Quarles, Emblems, V. ix. 5.

weatherliness (weᵺ'ėr-li-nes), n. 1. Weatherly character or qualities: said of ships and boats.

To combine the speed of the ordinary type of American sloop with the weatherliness of the English cutter.
Science, VI. 168.

2. Naut., the state of a vessel as to her capacity to ply speedily and quickly to windward.

weatherly (weᵺ'ėr-li), a. [< weather + -ly[1].] Naut., making very little leeway when close-hauled, even in a stiff breeze and heavy sea: noting a ship or boat.

Notwithstanding her weatherly qualities, the heavy cross sea, as she drove into it, headed her off bodily.
M. Scott, Tom Cringle's Log, viii.

weather-map (weᵺ'ėr-map), n. A map showing the temperature, pressure, wind, weather, and other meteorological elements over an extensive region, compiled from simultaneous observations at a large number of stations. The pressure is represented by isobars, the temperature by isotherms, the wind by arrows, and the weather by differently shaded circles or other conventional symbols. Weather-maps, prepared once or twice daily, form the basis upon which every government weather-service forecasts the weather and issues storm-warnings.

weather-molding (weᵺ'ėr-mōlʺding), n. Same as dripstone, 1.

weathermost (weᵺ'ėr-mōst), a. superl. [< weather + -most.] Furthest to windward.

weather-notation (weᵺ'ėr-nō-tāʺshọn), n. A system of abbreviation for the principal meteorological phenomena. Beaufort's weather-notation, which is used in Great Britain, is as follows: b, blue sky, whether clear or hazy; c, clouds (detached); d, drizzling rain; f, fog; g, very gloomy; h, hail; l, lightning; m, mist; o, overcast; p, passing, temporary showers; q, squally; r, rain; s, snow; t, thunder; u, ugly, threatening weather; w, dew.

weather-plant (weᵺ'ėr-plant), n. The Indian licorice, Abrus Abrus: so named in view of an alleged property of indicating the weather in advance. It is a common tropical twining shrub (see Abrus), having pinnate leaves with from 20 to 40 small leaflets. Recent careful observations show that the pairs of leaflets fold together more or less as the light is stronger or weaker, the movement being less vigorous in a moister atmosphere; that a certain wrinkling of the surface coexists with a coloring of the margin likely to be due to the attacks of an insect; and that the movement of the rachis, supposed to be barometric, is a diurnal oscillation which varies in extent with the amount of light. The temperature also affects the freedom of those motions. These characteristics are all paralleled in other plants, especially of the Mimosaceæ and Cæsalpiniaceæ. As a means of forecasting, the plant is not likely to be of practical worth.

weather-proof (weᵺ'ėr-prōf), a. Proof against rough weather.

Lord, thou hast given me a cell
Wherein to dwell,
A little house, whose humble roof
Is weather-proof.
Herrick, A Thanksgiving to God for his House.

There were only ten persons at the conference meeting last night, and seven of them were women; he wonders how many weather-proof Christians there are in the parish. C. D. Warner, Backlog Studies, p. 72.

weather-prophet (weᵺ'ėr-profʺet), n. [= Dan. veir-profet; as weather + prophet.] 1. One who foretells weather; one skilled in foreseeing the changes or state of the weather. [Colloq.]

Who that has read Greek does not know the humour with which the meteorological theories of the Athenian weather-prophets are ridiculed by Aristophanes in "The Clouds"? R. H. Scott, in Modern Meteorology, p. 166.

2. Anything in nature which serves as an indicator of weather changes, as a bird whose regular periodicity of migration or suddenness of appearance may indicate meteorological changes inappreciable by man.

Swallows have long been held for weather-prophets, and with reason enough in the quick response of their organization to the influence of atmospheric changes.
Coues, Birds of the Colorado Valley (1878), I. 372.

3. A device for foretelling changes in the weather. In most forms materials are employed which are so affected by dampness as to move some indicator, as a pair of figures, of which one appears or advances in dry and the other in wet weather. Other forms employ materials which change color according to the state of the atmosphere. Compare weather-box.

weather-report (weᵺ'ėr-rē-pōrtʺ), n. A daily report of meteorological observations at any special station; a collection of daily reports telegraphed from many stations; a statement of forecasts of probable changes in the weather, especially one issued by a weather-service.

weather-roll (weᵺ'ėr-rōl), n. The roll of a ship to windward, in a heavy sea on the beam: opposed to lee lurch.

weather-service (weᵺ'ėr-sėrʺvis), n. An institution organized for taking meteorological observations in accordance with a systematic plan, and for utilizing the data thus collected by forecasting the weather, issuing warnings of storms and floods, publishing climatological tables, distributing information as to the effect of the weather on growing crops, and by allied services. The principal governments of the world now maintain weather-services, upon which a part or all of these duties are imposed. In the United States the Weather Bureau of the Department of Agriculture is charged with performing these services. It employs about 900 paid employees, 2,500 unpaid voluntary observers, and 15,000 crop-reporters, whose work is directed toward giving information upon the condition of the crops as affected by the weather, and in general toward extending knowledge of local climatology. Several States have organized special State weather-services which offer local extensions of the general climate and crop service of the Weather Bureau.

weather-shore (weᵺ'ėr-shōr), n. The shore from which the wind blows.

weather-sign (weᵺ'ėr-sīn), n. Any phenomenon or sensation indicating state or change of weather; hence, generally, any prognostic or sign.

I am not old for nothing; I can tell
The weather-signs of love; you love this man.
Mrs. Browning, Aurora Leigh, ii.

weather-spy (weᵺ'ėr-spī), n. One who foretells the weather; a weather-prophet. Donne. [Rare.]

weather-stain (weᵺ'ėr-stān), n. [< weather + stain.] A stain or discoloration left or produced by the weather or by weathering.

Walls must get the weather-stain
Before they grow the ivy.
Mrs. Browning, Aurora Leigh, viii.

He . . . felt that the shape and colour of every roof and weather-stain and broken hillock was good, because his growing senses had been fed on them.
George Eliot, Mill on the Floss, iii. 9.

With weather-stains upon the wall,
And stairways worn, and crazy doors.
Longfellow, Wayside Inn, Prelude.

weather-stained (weᵺ'ėr-stānd), a. Stained or discolored by the weather. See weathering, 2.

A tomb somewhat weather-stained. Longfellow.

weather-station (weᵺ'ėr-stāʺshọn), n. A station where daily meteorological observations are made and reported to a central office; one of the stations of a weather-service.

weather-strip (weᵺ'ėr-strip), n. A slender strip of some material intended to keep out wind and cold; originally, a strip of wood covered with soft material, as list or cloth; specifically, a contrivance by which a strip of india-rubber is adjusted closely to the apertures of a door or window, or its frame or jamb, covering the crevice very tightly: it is generally a wooden molding into which a thin strip of rubber is fitted.

weather-strip (weᵺ'ėr-strip), v. t.; pret. and pp. weather-stripped, ppr. weather-stripping. To apply weather-strips to; fit or secure with weather-strips.

weather-symbol (weᵺ'ėr-simʺbọl), n. A conventional sign used in meteorological records, or in published meteorological observations or weather-maps, to represent graphically any designated phenomenon. The following symbols have been adopted by the International Meteorological Congress to represent the principal hydrometeors and a few other phenomena. Rain, ●; snow, ✳; thunderstorm, ⚿; lightning, ↯; hail, ▲; mist, ≡; frost, ⊥; dew, ♎; snowdrift, ∔; high wind, ⚴; solar corona, ⊕; solar halo, ◍; lunar corona, ⍦; lunar halo, ⍥; rainbow, ⌒; aurora, ⋈; haze, dust haze, ∞.

weather-tile (weᵀᴴ′ėr-tīl), n. A tile used as a substitute for a weather-board in frame-buildings. These tiles are overlapped like shingles, and are held in place by nails driven through holes formed in the tiles in molding.

weather-vane (weᵀᴴ′ėr-vān), n. A vane to show the direction of the wind; a weather-cock. See cut under vane.

weather-waft (weᵀᴴ′ėr-wäft), a. Tossed or carried by the wind. [Rare.]

I cannot but feare that those men never Moored their Anchors well in the firme soile of Heaven that are weather-waft up and down with every eddy-wind of every new doctrine. N. Ward, Simple Cobler, p. 20.

weather-wind (weᵀᴴ′ėr-wīnd), n. [A corruption of withywind for withwind.] Bindweed. Halliwell. [Provincial.] weather-wise (weᵀᴴ′ėr-wīz), a. [< ME. wederwis; < weather + *wise*¹.] Skilful in prognosticating the changes of the weather.

For thorw werre and wykked werkes and wederes vnresonable, Wederwise shipmen and witti clerkes also Han no bilieue to the lifte ne to the lore of philosofres.
Piers Plowman (B), xv. 350.

weather-wiser† (weᵀᴴ′ėr-wī″zėr), n. [< weather + wiser*, indicator; cf. waywiser.] Something that foretells the changes of the weather.

The flowers of pimpernel, the opening and shutting of which are the countryman's weather-wiser.
Derham, Physico-Theol., x., note.

weather-work (weᵀᴴ′ėr-wėrk), n. Defense or provision against the wind, sea, etc. Cook, Voyages, III. i. 3. (Encyc. Dict.) weather-worn (weᵀᴴ′ėr-wōrn), a. [< weather + worn.] Worn, injured, or defaced by the action of the weather; weathered.

weather-wreck (weᵀᴴ′ėr-rek), n. A wreck by storms. [Rare.]

Well, well, you have built a nest
That will stand all storms; you need not mistrust
A weather-wreck.
Beau. and Fl., Wit at Several Weapons, ii. 2.

weave¹ (wēv), v.; pret. wove (formerly also weaved), pp. woven (sometimes wove and formerly also weaved), ppr. weaving. [< ME. weven (pret. waf, wof, pl. weven, woven, pp. woven), < AS. wefan (pret. wæf, pp. wefen) = MD. D. weven = OHG. weban, MHG. G. weben = Icel. vefa = Sw. väfva = Dan. væve, weave (connection with Goth. bi-waibjan, wrap around, is doubtful), = Gr. √ ὑφ (orig. √ Fαφ), in ὑφή, ὑφος, a web, ὑφαίνειν, weave; cf. Skt. ūrna-vābhi, a spider, lit. 'wool-weaver,' Skt. √ va, weave, also Lith. woras, a spinner, spider. From the root of *weave*¹ are ult. E. web, *weft*¹, woof, oof, abb, etc.] I. trans. 1. To form by interlacing flexible parts, such as threads, yarns, filaments, or strips of different materials. See weaving.

Where the women wove hangings for the grove.
2 Ki. xxiii. 7.

And now his woven girths he breaks asunder.
Shak., Venus and Adonis, l. 266.

To wanton Dalliance negligently laid,
We weave the Chaplet, and we crown the Bowl.
Prior, Solomon, ii.

These purple vests were weaved by Dardan dames.
Dryden.

2. To form a texture from; interlace or entwine into a fabric.

When she weaved the sleided silk.
Shak., Pericles, iv., Prol., l. 21.

3. To entwine; unite by intermixture or close connection; insert by or as by weaving.

She waf it wel, and wroot the story above.
Chaucer, Good Women, l. 2364.

This weaves itself perforce into my business.
Shak., Lear, ii. 1. 17.

The government of Episcopacy is now so weav'd into the common Law: In Gods name let weave out againe.
Milton, Reformation in Eng., ii.

These words, thus woven into song.
Byron, Childe Harold, iii. 112.

He carries off only such scraps in his memory as it is hardly possible to weave into a connected and consistent whole. Prescott. (Imp. Dict.)

4. To inclose by weaving something about.

The mind can weave itself warmly in the cocoon of its own thoughts and dwell a hermit anywhere.
Lowell, Study Windows, p. 56.

5. To contrive, fabricate, or construct with design or elaborate care: as, to weave a plot.

For answer . . . Acesius weaveth out a long history of things that happened in the persecution under Decius, and of men which to save life forsook faith.
Hooker, Eccles. Polity, vi. 6.

My brain, more busy than the labouring spider,
Weaves tedious snares to trap mine enemies.
Shak., 2 Hen. VI., iii. 1. 340.

Wove paper. See paper.

II. intrans. 1. To practise weaving; work with a loom.

Proclaim that I can sing, weave, sew, and dance.
Shak., Pericles, iv. 6. 194.

They that pretend to wonders must weave cunningly.
Fletcher, Spanish Curate, ii. 1.

2. To become woven or interwoven. [Rare.]

The amorous vine which in the elm still weaves.
W. Browne.

3. In the manège, to make a motion of the head, neck, and body from side to side like the shuttle of a weaver: said of a horse. Imp. Dict.

★weave¹ (wēv), n. [< *weave*¹, v.] The act or a style of weaving. [Trade use.]

A Practical Treatise on the Construction and Application of weaves for all Textile Fabrics. Nature, XXXVIII. 600.

The great difference between a twill and a plain, or between a plain and a satin weave. Fibre and Fabric, V. 15.

weave²†, v. [Also weve; < ME. weven (pret. wevede, wefde, pp. weved), < AS. wæfan* (in comp. be-wæfan, wrap around, clothe, = OHG. ze-weiban = Goth. bi-waibjan, wrap around, cover, mixed with the appar. cognate Icel. veifa), shake, vibrate, wave: see *wave*¹.] I. trans. 1. To shake; cause to waver; wave; brandish; toss; waft.

Auntrose [dangerous] is thin euel,
Ful wonderliche it the weues, wel I wot the sothe.
William of Palerne (E. E. T. S.), l. 922.

Shaking a pike of fire in defiance of the enemie, and weauing them amaine, we bad them come aboord.
Hakluyt's Voyages, III. 566.

2. To move; cause to move.

That comli ladi cayres to hire chaumber, & weued vp a window.
William of Palerne (E. E. T. S.), l. 2978.

II. intrans. 1. To wave; waver; float about.

To cold coles sche schal be brent 3it or come eue;
& the aschis of hire body with the wind weue.
William of Palerne (E. E. T. S.), l. 4368.

2. To move; go.

Thou wylnez ouer thys water to weue.
Alliterative Poems (ed. Morris), i. 319.

He saugh the stroke come and wevyd a-side.
Merlin (E. E. T. S.), iii. 389.

weavel†, n. See weevil.

weaver (wē′vėr), n. [< ME. wevere, wevar, < AS. ★wefere* = MD. D. wever = OHG. weberi, MHG. webare, G. weber = Sw. väfvare = Dan. væver, a weaver; as *weave*¹ + *-er*¹. Cf. webber.] 1. One who weaves; one whose occupation is weaving.

Wewars also of wolne and lynnyn.
Quoted in Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), Pref., p. xlvii.

Weavers were supposed to be generally good singers. Their trade being sedentary, they had an opportunity of practising, and sometimes in parts, while they were at work. Warburton adds that many of the weavers in Queen Elizabeth's days were Flemish Calvinists, who fled from the persecution of the Duke of Alva, and were therefore particularly given to singing psalms. . . . Hence the exclamation of Falstaff, "I would I were a weaver! I could sing psalms, and all manner of songs." Nares.

2. In ornith., a weaver-bird.—3. In entom.: (a) A gyrinid beetle; a whirligig: so called from its intricate circlings and gyrations on the surface of the water. See whirligig, 4, and cut under Gyrinidæ. (b) A spinning-spider; a true araneid which weaves a web. Various groups of such spiders are distinguished by the form of their webs, as line-weavers, orb-weavers, tapestry-weavers, tube-weavers, tunnel-weavers, etc. See spider.

4. In ichth., same as weever.—Mahali weaver. See weaver-bird.—Sociable weaver. See weaver-bird.—Tapestry weaver. See tapestry.—Weavers' bottom, a chronic inflammation of a bursa situated over the tuberosity of the ischium, occurring as a result of sitting long and constantly on a hard seat.—Yellow-crowned weaver. See weaver-bird.

weaver-bird (wē′vėr-bėrd), n. One of numerous Old World (chiefly African and Indian) conirostral passerine birds, noted for the dexterity and ingenuity with which they weave the materials of their nests into a textile fabric, and also for the extraordinary size and unusual shape of some of these structures. The name weaver-bird, in its present broad sense, is modern, and appears to have originally specified a single species (see below). In the last and early in the present century the birds of this group which were then known were classed with the finches and grosbeaks, sometimes with the orioles, mainly according to the thickness of the bill, and some of them received still more misleading names. Though there was an Oriolus textor in 1788, the genus Ploceus was not named till 1817, and the family Ploceidæ not till 1847. With the recognition of this large and varied group, as well marked from the Fringillidæ by the possession of 10 instead of 9 primaries, an English name became a desideratum; and weavers, weaver-birds, or weaver-finches became synonymous with Ploceidæ, without implying that all the birds so named build very elaborate nests. (See Ploceus, Ploceidæ.) Two remarkable types of nest may be noted. One is the hive-nest of the republican or sociable weavers, many pairs of which build in common an enormous domed structure. (See Philetærus, and cut under hive-nest.) The other, the usual type of nest, is pensile or pendulous, and very closely woven, like that of the American hang-nests, but more elaborate, and with a hole in one side instead of being open at the top, in this respect resembling the nests of various titmice (bush-tits and bottle-tits) and some wrens. These nests are generally slung at the ends of long, slender, drooping branches, often over the water of a pool or stream, where they are safest from monkeys and snakes. In some cases the males build additional nests for themselves, in which no eggs are to be laid—a habit, however, not confined to weaver-birds (see cock-nest). One of the largest, most characteristic, and best-known genera of weaver-birds is that African form called Oryx (a preoccupied name) by Lesson in 1831, and Pyromelana by Bonaparte in that year, though oftener called Euplectes (Swainson, 1837). There are 12 or 15 species, the characteristic coloration of which is black set off with scarlet or orange in large massed areas. P. oryx, the male of which is scarlet and black, is about 5 inches long; it was originally described by Edwards in 1751 as "the grenadier," from some fancied likeness of its plumage to a soldier's uniform. It inhabits South Africa. P. aurea of western Africa is the golden-backed finch and gold-backed grosbeak of the early ornithologists, being one of the yellow and black species. P. capensis, the Cape grosbeak of Latham, is another, from Cape Colony. P. taha, sometimes known as the Mahali weaver, and generally called Ploceus or Euplectes taha, is very small (scarcely 4½ inches long), of rich golden-yellow and velvety-black hues, and its nest is disproportionately large. It belongs to an extensive region of southeastern Africa. (See cut under taha.) Several other African weavers represent the genus Ploceipasser, as P. mahali. There is a large series of small birds, all technically weavers (Ploceidæ), which fall in the spermestine division of the family, and belong to numerous genera of the Ethiopian, Oriental, and even the Australian region, as various amadavats, waxbills, strawberry-finches, blood-finches, senegals, etc. (See Viduinæ (a), and cuts under Ploceus, Senegal, Tæniopygia, and waxbill.) The birds of an extensive Oriental and Australian genus Munia (with its subdivisions, as Padda) belong here. (See cut under sparrow.) Fifteen species of Uroloncha, characterized by exserted middle tail-feathers, range from Africa to New Guinea; one of them is U. acuticauda. The genus Erythrura is another large one, reaching from India through much of Polynesia. None of the foregoing birds falls in the subfamily Ploceinæ as now restricted. Among the latter may be noted the species of the African genus Sitagra, 6 in number, of which the best-known is S. capensis of Cape Colony, the olive oriole of Latham, commonly called yellow-crowned weaver and Ploceus icterocephalus. This is 7 inches long, of an olive and golden-yellow and black color; it builds a large bottle-shaped or kidney-formed pensile nest. Foudia is a Madagascar type. The most extensive genus of all is the African Hyphantornis, with over 30 species, or the golden weavers, as H. galbula. These birds represent in Africa, or may be compared with, the hang-nest orioles of America. One of the longest- and best-known is H. cucullatus of western Africa, from Senegambia to the Gaboon; it has oftener been called H. textor (after Oriolus textor of Gmelin, 1788), and enjoys the distinction of being one of the first, if not the first, to which the name weaver attached, being the weever oriole of Latham (1782); it is 6 inches long, yellow and black. Malimbus is an African genus of black and crimson, scarlet, vermilion, or yellow coloration, as M. cristatus. The African genus Textor (one of the early names—Temminck, 1828) has 2 marked species, T. albirostris (or alecto), the white-billed, and T. erythrorhynchus (or niger), the red-billed. (See cut under Textor.) Finally, the genus Ploceus itself as now restricted is an Oriental type of a few species, commonly called baya-birds, though it used to be indiscriminately applied to any of the foregoing, and became the name-giving genus of the whole group. See cut under Ploceus. (For those Ploceidæ known as whidah-birds, see Viduinæ.)

Weaver-bird (Sitagra capensis).

Weaver-bird (Hyphantornis textor).

weaveress† (wē′vėr-es), n. [< weaver + -ess.] A female weaver.

He found two looms alone remaining at work, in the hands of an ancient weaver and weaveress.
J. H. Blunt, Hist. of Dursley, p. 222. (Davies.)

weaver-finch (wē′vėr-finch), n. Any weaver-bird.

The Ploceidæ, or weaver-finches.
A. R. Wallace, Distribution of Animals, II. 286.

weaver-fish† (wē′vėr-fish), n. A fish of the genus Trachinus; a weever. See cut under Trachinus.

weaver-shell (wē′vėr-shel), n. A shuttle-shell.

weaver's-shuttle (wē′vėrz-shut″l), n. The shuttle-shell, Radius volva. See Ovulum, and cut under shuttle-shell.

weavil†, n. An old spelling of weevil.

weaving (wē′ving), n. [< ME. wevynge, weffynge; verbal n. of weave[1], v.] 1. The act of one who or that which weaves; specifically, the act or art of producing cloth or other textile fabrics by means of a loom from the combination of threads or filaments. In weaving all kinds of fabrics, whether plain or figured, one system of threads, called the woof or weft, is made to pass alternately under and over another system of threads, called the warp, web, or chain. The essential operations are the successive raising of certain threads of the warp and the depression of others, so as to form a shed for the passage of the weft-yarn, which is then beaten up by means of a lathe or batten. Weaving is performed by the hand in what are called hand-looms, or by steam-power in what are called power-looms, but the general arrangements for both are to a certain extent the same. (See loom[1].) Weaving, in the most general sense of the term, comprehends not only the manufacture of those textile fabrics which are prepared in the loom, but also that of network, lacework, etc. See cut under shuttle.

2. In the manège, the action of a horse that weaves, or moves the body from side to side.

weazand, n. See weasand.

weazel†, n. See weasel.

weazen (wē′zn). See wizen[1].

web (web), n. [< ME. web, webbe, < AS. web (webb-), ★a web (= OS. webbi = OFries. web, wob = D. web, webbe, a web (= LG. web, webbe = OHG. weppi, wappi, MHG. weppe, webbe, webe, G. dial. webb (cf. G. gewebe), web, woof, = Icel. vefr = Sw. väf = Dan. väv, web), < wefan, weave: see weave[1].] 1. That which is woven; a woven fabric; specifically, a whole piece of cloth in course of being woven, or after it comes from the loom.

Biholde how Eleyne hath a newe cote;
I wisshe thanne it were myne and al the webbe after [i. e., all left after making the coat].
Piers Plowman (B), v. 111.

My dochter she 's a thrifty lass;
She span seven year to me;
An' if it war well counted up,
Full ten wobs it would be.
Kempy Kaye (Child's Ballads, VIII. 140).

At noon
To-morrow come, and ye shall pay
Each fortieth web of cloth to me,
As the law is, and go your way.
M. Arnold, The Sick King in Bokhara.

2. Same as webbing, 1.—3. The warp in a loom. [Provincial.]—4. Something resembling a web or sheet of cloth; specifically, a large roll of paper such as is used in the web-press for newspapers.

Several men or boys are placed to receive the sheets [of paper] according to the number into which the width of the web is divided. Ure, Dict., III. 403.

5. Any one of various thin and broad objects, probably so named from some similarity to the thin, broad fabric of the loom. Especially—(a†) A sheet or thin plate, as of lead.

There with stately pomp by heaps they wend,
And Christians slain roll up in webs of lead.
Fairfax, tr. of Tasso's Godfrey of Boulogne, x. 26.

(b†) The blade of a sword.

A sword, whereof the web was steel;
Pummel, rich stone; hilts, gold, approved by touch.
Fairfax, tr. of Tasso's Godfrey of Boulogne, ii. 93.

(c) The blade of a saw. (d) The plate (or its equivalent) in a beam or girder which connects the upper and lower flat or laterally extending plates. (e) The corresponding part of a rail, between the head and the foot. See cut under rail. (f) The flat part of a wheel, between the hub and the rim, as in some railway-wheels—occupying the space where spokes would be in an ordinary wheel. (g) The solid part of the bit of a key. (h) The part of an anvil below the head, which is of reduced size. (i) The thin, sharp part of the colter of a plow. See cut under plow. (j) A canvas cloth used in a saddle. (k) The basketwork of a gabion. See cut under gabion. (l) In a vehicle, a combination of bands or straps of a stout fabric, serving to keep the hood from opening too far. E. H. Knight. (m) The arm of a crank.

6. In ornith., the blade, standard, vane, or vexillum of a feather: so called from the texture acquired through the weaving or interlocking of the barbs by the barbules with their barbicels and hooklets. That vane which is furthest from the middle line of the bird's body is the outer web; the other, the inner web, is technically distinguished as pogonium externum and internum. The two often differ from each other in size, shape, or color, or in all these respects; the difference is most pronounced on the flight-feathers (as seen in any quill pen) and lateral rudder-feathers. See cuts under aftershaft, barb, ocellate, and penciling.

They [barbules] make the vane truly a web: that is, they so connect the barbs together that some little force is required to pull them apart.
Coues, Key to N. A. Birds, p. 84.

7. The plexus of very delicate threads or filaments which a spider spins, and which serves as a net to catch flies or other insects for its food; a cobweb; also, a similar substance spun and woven into a sort of fabric by many insects, usually as a covering or protection. See bag-worm, web-worm, and tent-caterpillar.

The Comissaries court 's a spiders webbe,
That doth entangle all the lesser flies.
Times' Whistle (E. E. T. S.), p. 81.

Much like a subtle spider, which doth sit
In middle of her web, which spreadeth wide.
Sir J. Davies, Immortal. of Soul, xviii.

8. Figuratively, anything carefully contrived and elaborately put together or woven; a plot; a scheme.

All this is but a web of the wit; it can work nothing.
Bacon, Praise of Knowledge (ed. 1887).

The Fates at length the blissful Web have spun.
Congreve, Birth of the Muse.

O, what a tangled web we weave
When first we practise to deceive!
Scott, Marmion, vi. 17.

It is one web of intricate complications between the Emperors of the East and West, the Republic of Venice, the Kings of Hungary, Dalmatia, and Bosnia.
E. A. Freeman, Venice, p. 229.

9. In anat., a connective or other tissue; any open structure composed of fibers and membranes running into each other irregularly as if tangled, and serving to support fat or other soft substances. See tissue and histology.—10. In zoöl., the membrane or fold of skin which connects the digits of any animal; especially, that which connects the toes of a bird or a quadruped, making the animal palmiped, and the foot itself palmate, as occurs in nearly all aquatic birds (hence called web-footed), and in many aquatic mammals, as the beaver, the muskrat, and ornithorhynchus. Webs sometimes occur as a congenital defect of the human fingers or toes. The relatively largest webs are those of the bats' wings. In birds the extent and special character of the webs (technically called palamæ) are taken into some account in classification, and some conditions of the webs receive special names. See web-footed, and cuts under bat[2], duckbill, flying-frog, Œdemia, otary, palmate, semipalmate, and totipalmate.

Some full-breasted swan
That, fluting a wild carol ere her death, Ruffles her pure cold plume, and takes the flood
With swarthy webs. Tennyson, Morte d'Arthur.

11. In coal-mining, the face or wall of a long-wall stall in course of being holed and broken down for removal. Gresley. [Midland coalfields, Eng.]—Basal web, a small web between a bird's toes, extending little if any beyond the basal joints of the digits it connects. See cuts under Ereunetes and semipalmate.—Chain-web, a kind of saw; a scroll-saw.—Choroid web, the velum interpositum.—Emarginate web, a full web between a bird's toes, whose free border is notably concave or emarginate. See cut under totipalmate.—Geometrical spider's web. See geometric, and cut under triangle.—Holland web†. Same as holland, n., 1.—Incised web, a very deeply emarginate web of a bird's toes.—India-rubber web, a fabric in which a warp of rubber threads is filled with a weft of silk, linen, or cotton. The warp, rendered inelastic during the weaving, has its elasticity subsequently restored by a process in which the fabric is subjected to heat. Also called elastic web.—Mill-saw web, a thin saw carried in a vertical saw-gate, and used for resawing.—Pin and web†. See pin[3].—Spider's web. See spider-web.

web (web), v. t.; pret. and pp. webbed, ppr. webbing. [< ME. webben, < AS. webban, weave, web; from the noun.] 1. To cover with or as with a web; envelop.—2. To connect with a web, as the toes of a bird; render palmate.—Webbed fingers, two or more fingers of the human hand which are united by a band of connecting tissue, either occurring congenitally or as an abnormality, or resulting from cicatrization after burns and other wounds; dactylion. See web-fingered, and Didot's operation (under operation).—Webbed toes, a condition affecting the toes of the human foot, abnormally or accidentally, similar to that of webbed fingers. See web-footed.

webbe[1]†, n. [< ME. webbe, a weaver, < AS. webba, a weaver, < wefan, weave: see weave[1], and cf. web. The ME. noun webbe survives in the proper name Webb.] A weaver. See webber.

A webbe, a dyere, and a tapicer.
Chaucer, Gen. Prol. to C. T., l. 362.

The webbes ant the fullaris assembleden hem alle,
Ant makeden huere consail in huere commune halle.
Flemish Insurrection (Child's Ballads, VI. 270).

webbe[2]†, n. An old spelling of web.

webber† (web′ėr), n. [< ME. webbare, < AS. webbere, a weaver, < webban, weave: see web, n. The noun survives in the surname Webber.] A Middle English form of weaver[1].

★webbing (web′ing), n. [< ME. webbynge; verbal n. of web, v.] 1. A woven material, especially one woven without pile, plainly and strongly. The term is applied to material or pieces of material which are intended for strength, to bear a weight, to be drawn tight, or the like, as a belt or surcingle, and also for that which serves to protect and cover the edge of a piece of more delicate fabric: thus, Eastern rugs are often made with several inches of webbing projecting beyond the part that is covered with pile.

2. In printing, the broad tapes used to conduct webs or sheets of paper in a printing-machine, or the broad straps or girths attached to the rounce of the hand-press.—3. In zoöl., the webs of the digits collectively: as, the webbing is extensive or complete; the webbed state of the digits, or the formation of their webs; palmation. See web, n., 10.—Elastic webbing. See elastic.

webby (web′i), a. [< web + -y[1].] Relating to a web, or consisting of a web, in any sense; web-like; membranous.

Bats on their webby wings in darkness move,
And feebly shriek their melancholy love.
Crabbe, Works, I. 50.

weber (vā′bėr), n. [After Wilhelm Weber (1804–1891), a German physicist.] A name proposed by Latimer Clarke for the unit of electrical quantity which has since been named coulomb; it was also for some time used for the practical unit of electrical current, but has been replaced by ampere.

Weberian (we-bē′riạn), a. [< Weber (see def.) + -ian.] Pertaining to or named after a person named Weber (in the following phrases E. H. Weber, 1795–1833, a German anatomist and physiologist).—Weberian apparatus, the whole of the parts or organs by means of which the air-bladder of some fishes is connected with the ear, including the Weberian ossicles and their connections.

An air-bladder connected with the auditory organ by intervention of a Weberian apparatus, formed of parts of the anterior vertebræ, modified after precisely the same plan as in the other siluroids.
Amer. Nat., May, 1889, p. 427.

Weberian ossicles. See ossicle.

weber-meter (vā′bėr-mē″tėr), n. Same as ampere-meter or as coulomb-meter (see weber).

Weber's chronometer. A kind of metronome invented by Gottfried Weber, consisting of a weight and a graduated and adjustable cord. See metronome.

Weber's corpuscle. The depression in the verumontanum situated between the openings of the ejaculatory ducts.

Weber's experiment. The experiment of closing one ear to find that a vibrating tuning-fork placed with the end resting against the vertex will be heard more distinctly in that ear.

Weber's glands. The mucous glands of the tongue.

Weber's law. See law[1].

Weber's paradox. The fact that a muscle, when so stretched that it cannot contract, may elongate.

web-eye (web′ī), n. In pathol., same as pterygium, 2.

web-eyed (web′īd), a. Exhibiting or affected with the disease called web-eye.

web-fingered (web′fing″gėrd), a. Having the fingers of the hand, or any digits of the fore limb, connected by means of more or less extensive webs formed of a fold of skin: as, the bat is a completely web-fingered animal. The fingers of the human hand are naturally webbed a little at the base, and sometimes connected for their whole length, constituting a congenital deformity. Compare webbed fingers (under web, v. t.), and see cuts under bat[2], flying-fox, and flying-frog.

He was, it is said, web-footed naturally, and partially web-fingered.
Mayhew, London Labour and London Poor, II. 137.

★web-foot (web′fůt), n. A foot whose toes, or some of them, are webbed; also, the condition of being web-footed. As applied to persons, it implies an abnormal condition, corresponding to the web-fingered.—Gillie web-foot. See gillie.

★web-footed (web′fůt″ed), a. Having web-feet; being web-toed, whether as an abnormality of persons, or as the natural formation of the feet of many aquatic animals. Many mammals are web-footed, as the seal, the otter, the muskrat, the beaver, and the duck-mole. Nearly all swimming and many wading birds are web-footed, to a varying extent in different cases. The salient batrachians are mostly web-footed, especially frogs, as to their hind feet. See web, n., 10, web, v. t., webbing, 3, pinniped, palmiped, palmate, semipalmate, totipalmate, with various cuts, and those under flying-frog, duckbill, and otary.

web-footedness (web′fůt″ed-nes), n. Web-foot; the state of being web-footed.

web-machine (web′mạ-shēn″), n. Same as web-press.

web-press (web′pres), n. A printing-machine which is automatically supplied with its paper from a great web or roll: usually a rotary machine, but the name is given to newspaper printing-machines of different constructions, like those of Hoe, Marinoni, Walter, and others. See cut under printing-machine.

web-saw (web′sâ), n. A frame-saw.

The web-saw, the glue-pot, the plane, and the hammer are the principal tools used. The Century, XXXVII. 418.

webster† (web′stėr), n. [= Sc. wabster; < ME. webstere, webstar, < AS. webbestre, a female weaver, < webban, weave: see web and -ster. As with other ME. forms in -ster (strictly fem. in themselves), the word was also often regarded as masc. (cf. baxter and brewster[1], used as masc. in ME.). The name survives in the surname Webster.] A weaver. Wyclif, Job vii. 6.

One witness says "a very good webster can scarcely earne fower pence a day wth weavinge."
Record Soc. Lancashire and Cheshire, XI. 53.

websterite (web′stėr-īt), n. [So named in honor of Thomas Webster (1772–1844), a Scottish geologist.] Aluminite; hydrous tribasic sulphate of aluminium, found in Sussex, England, and at Halle in Prussia, in reniform masses and botryoidal concretions of a white or yellowish-white color.

Webster's condenser. An apparatus consisting of two lenses, used in microscopy for intensifying the light thrown on the object.

web-toed (web′tōd), a. Web-footed.

web-wheel (web′hwēl), n. A wheel in which the hub and rim are connected by a web or plate, which may be either intact or perforated. It is a common form for railway car-wheels, and is also used for the wheels of watches and clocks, which are cast or stamped with webs, and then crossed out—that is, the web is perforated and filed into the form of spokes. E. H. Knight.

web-winged (web′wingd), a. Winged by large webs stretched between elongated digits of the fore limbs, as bats; chiropterous. See cuts under bat[2] and Furia.

web-worm (web′wėrm), n. Any one of several lepidopterous larvæ which feed more or less gregariously, and spin large webs into which they retire at night, or within which they feed during the day until the contained foliage is entirely devoured, when the web is enlarged. The tent-caterpillars, Malacosoma americana and M. distria, are web-worms. (See cut under tent-caterpillar.) The fall web-worm is the larva of the arctiid Hyphantria cunea. The garden web-worm is the larva of Loxostege rantalis, a pyralid moth of the family Botidæ. This species is not gregarious, but the larvæ form individual webs near the roots of corn, cotton, cabbage, melon, potato, and other cultivated crops in the western United States.—Grape web-worm. Same as vine inch-worm (which see, under vine).—Turf web-worm. Same as sod-worm.

wecht (weċht), n. [Also spelled weight, weght; perhaps connected with ME. weggen, < AS. wecgan, move, a secondary verb, < wegan, carry: see weigh[1], and cf. weight[1].] An instrument in the form of a sieve, but without holes, used for lifting grain. Burns. [Scotch.]

wed† (wed), n. [= Sc. wad; < ME. wed, wedde, < AS. wed, wedd, a pledge, = OFries. wed = MD. wedde = OHG. wetti, weti, MHG. wette, wete, wet, G. wette = Icel. veth, a pledge, = Sw. vad, a bet, appeal, = Goth. wadi, a pledge, = L. vas (vad-), a pledge; cf. Gr. ἀεθλον, contr. ἀθλον (orig. ἀϝεθλον*), a prize, the prize of a contest (> ult. E. athlete, etc.); cf. Skt. vadhū, a bride, woman. Hence wed, v., wadset, etc. From the same source, L. or Teut., are ult. E. vadimony, gage, engage, wage, wager, etc.] A pledge; pawn; security.

He that lawith at a mynstrels worde gevith to hym a wedde. Political Poems, etc. (ed. Furnivall), p. 31.

Passage shalt thou pai here under the grene-wode tre,
Or els thou shalt leve a wedde with me.
Playe of Robyn Hode (Child's Ballads, V. 427).

There 's nane that gaes by Carterhaugh
But maun leave him a wad,
Either gowd rings, or green mantles.
The Young Tamlane (Child's Ballads, I. 115).

To wed, in pledge; in pawn.

A Kyng of Fraunce boughte theise Relikes somtyme of the Jewes, to whom the Emperour had leyde hem to wedde, for a gret summe of Sylvre.
Mandeville, Travels, p. 13.

Let him be war, his nekke lith to wedde.
Chaucer, Knight's Tale, l. 360.

My londes beth set to wedde, Robyn, Untyll a certayne daye.
Lytell Geste of Robyn Hode (Child's Ballads, V. 54).

wed (wed), v.; pret. and pp. wedded, wed, ppr. wedding. [< ME. wedden, < AS. weddian, pledge, engage, = OS. weddian = MD. D. wedden, lay a wager, = MHG. G. wetten, wager, = Icel. vethja, wager, = Sw. vädja, appeal, = Dan. vedde, wager, = Goth. ga-wadjōn, pledge, betroth; from the noun. Cf. wage, gage[1], v.] I. trans. 1†. To pledge; hence, to wager.

Yee be welcome, that dare I wele wedde.
My lorde has sente for to seke hym.
York Plays, p. 261.

The yonge man, hauinge his hart all redy wedded to his frende Titus, . . . refused . . . to be parswaded.
Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, ii. 12.

I'll wad a weather he'll gar the blude spin frae under your nails. Scott, Black Dwarf, xvii.

2. To marry; take for husband or for wife.

Thei wedden there no Wyfes; for alle the Wommen there ben commoun, and thei forsake no man.
Mandeville, Travels, p. 179.

Since the day
I saw thee first, and wedded thee.
Milton, P. L., ix. 1030.

3. To join in marriage; give or unite in wedlock.

In Syracusa was I born, and wed
Unto a woman. Shak., C. of E., i. 1. 37.

4. To unite closely in affection; attach firmly by passion or prejudice: as, to be wedded to one's habits or opinions.

Men are wedded to their lusts. Tillotson, Sermons.

I am not wedded to these ideas.
Jefferson, To Colonel Monroe (Correspondence, I. 236).

Faith, fanatic Faith, once wedded fast
To some dear falsehood, hugs it to the last.
Moore, Lalla Rookh, Veiled Prophet.

5. To unite forever or inseparably.

Thou art wedded to calamity. Shak., R. and J., iii. 3. 3.

They led the vine
To wed her elm. Milton, P. L., v. 215.

6†. To espouse; take part with.

They . . . wedded his cause. Clarendon.

To wed with a rush ring. See rush[1].

II. intrans. To marry; contract marriage; become united as in matrimony.

With Athulf child he wedde.
King Horn (E. E. T. S.), p. 9.

For to been a wyf he gaf me leve
Of indulgence, so it is no repreve
To wedde me if that my make dye.

I. trans. 1. To cleave with a wedge or with wedges; rive.

My heart,
As wedged with a sigh, would rive in twain.
Shak., T. and C., i. 1. 35.

2. To drive as a wedge is driven; crowd or compress closely; jam.

Among the crowd i' the Abbey; where a finger
Could not be wedged in more.
Shak., Hen. VIII., iv. 1. 58.

Wedged in the rocky shoals, and sticking fast.
Dryden, Æneid, v. 285.

The age had not so much refinement that any sense of impropriety restrained the wearers of petticoat and farthingale from stepping forth into the public ways, and wedging their not unsubstantial persons . . . into the throng nearest to the scaffold at an execution.
Hawthorne, Scarlet Letter, ii.

3. wedge-micrometer (wej'mī-krom″e-tėr), n. See micrometer.

wedge-photometer (wej'fō-tom″e-tėr), n. An instrument for measuring the brightness of stars. It consists of a long wedge of neutral-tinted dark glass arranged to slide before the eyepiece of a telescope, and provided with a graduated scale. The scale-reading, which corresponds to the thickness of the wedge at the point where the image of the star becomes invisible, determines the star's brightness.

wedge-press (wej'pres), n. A press for extracting oil from seeds, as hemp-seed, sunflower-seed, etc., by crushing. It has perforated iron cheek-plates, between which the seeds are placed in hair bags, with blocks and wedges between the bags and the plates. A tightening-wedge is then driven in by a maul, and the juice escapes through the perforations in the plates, and is collected in a cistern below.

wedge-shaped (wej'shāpt), a. Having the shape of a wedge; wedged; cuneiform; cuneate: as, a wedge-shaped leaf; the wedge-shaped tail of a bird: usually noting surfaces, without regard to solidity.—Wedge-shaped isobar, an isobar bounding a projecting area of high pressure moving along between two cyclones.

wedge-shell (wej'shel), n. A bivalve mollusk of the family Donacidæ.

wedge-tailed (wej'tāld), a. Having the tail wedged or cuneate: noting birds whose tail-feathers are regularly graduated in length to such an extent that the tail when moderately spread appears to be beveled off obliquely at the end from the middle to the outermost feather on each side. It is a very common formation. See cuts under Sphenocercus, Sphenura, Trichoglossus, and Uroaëtus.—Wedge-tailed eagle, Uroaëtus audax, of Australia. See cut under Uroaëtus.—Wedge-tailed pigeon or dove. See Sphenocercus (with cut).

wedge-wise (wej'wīz), adv. In the manner of a wedge.

wedging (wej'ing), n. 1. A method of joining timbers, in which the tenon is made just long enough to pass through the mortised piece, and a small wedge is driven into a saw-cut in the end of the tenon, with the effect of expanding it, and thus preventing its withdrawal.—2. In kneading clay for fine modeling, the process of cutting the clay to pieces, as by means of a strained wire, and then throwing the severed pieces forcibly upon the mass, the object being to expel the air.—Foxtail wedging. See foxtail.

wedging-crib (wej'ing-krib), n. In mining, in shaft-sinking in very watery ground, a curb or crib on which the tubbing is placed. It generally consists of pieces of oak carefully shaped and joined together. Between the exterior of this curb and the rock there is left a space of a few inches in width, which is made water-tight by the most careful wedging and the use of moss. The object of the whole arrangement of the wedging-curb and the tubbing which rests upon it is permanently to hold back the water which would otherwise find its way into the shaft and have to be raised to the surface by pumping. In some mining districts the wedging-crib is made of cast-iron.

Wedgwood scale. A scale used by the inventor in measuring high temperatures by his pyrometer: as, 10° Wedgwood. The zero corresponds to 1077° F.

weed[1] (wēd), n. [< ME. weed, wed, weod, wied, ★a weed, < AS. wēod, wiod = OS. MD. wiod, D. wiede, a weed, = LG. woden, woen, pl., the green stalks and leaves of turnips, etc.] 1. Any one of those herbaceous plants which are useless and without special beauty, or especially which are positively troublesome. The application of this general term is somewhat relative. Handsome but pernicious plants, as the oxeye daisy, cone-flower, and the purple cow-wheat of Europe (Melampyrum arvense), are weeds to the agriculturist, flowers to the esthetic. So also plants that are cultivated for use or beauty, as grasses, hemp, carrot, parsnip, morning-glory, become weeds when they spring up where they are not wanted. The exotics of cool countries are sometimes weeds in the tropics.

On fat londe and ful of donge foulest wedes groweth.
Piers Plowman (C), xiii. 224.

An ill weed grows apace. Beau. and Fl., Coxcomb, iv. 3.

★week[1] (wēk), n. [Early mod. E. also weke; < ME. weke, wike, wuke, woke, wouke (pl. wiken, woken, wikes, wukes, wokes), a week, period of seven days, < AS. wice, wicu, wuce, wucu = OS. wika = OFries. wike = MD. weke, D. week = MLG. weke, LG. weke, wek, week = OHG. wehha, also wohha (> Finnish viikа), MHG. woche, wuche, G. woche, week, = Icel. vika = Sw. vecka = Dan. uge (for vuge*), a week, = Goth. wikō, found in the phrase wikōn kunjis seinis, tr. Gr. ἐν τῇ τάξει ἐφημερίας αὐτοῦ, L. in ordine vicis suæ, 'in the order of his course,' Luke i. 8, but prob. to be taken, in the Goth., as 'in the week or period of his course,' wikōn appearing to mean 'succession,' 'change,' hence 'recurrent period,' and to be allied to Icel. vīkja, turn, return, etc.: see weak. The collocation of the Goth. wikōn and the L. vicis in this passage, and the resemblance of form, have given rise to the notion that the Teut. word is borrowed from the L.; but the L. word equiv. to wikōn is ordine, and there is no evidence that L. vix, vicis* was ever used in the sense 'week.'] 1. A period of seven days, of which the days are numbered or named in like succession in every period—in English, Sunday (or first day, etc.), Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, Friday, Saturday (or seventh day); hence, a period of seven days. The week is not dependent upon any other period, as a subdivision of that period, but cuts across the division-lines of month and year alike with its never-ending repetition. In general Jewish and Christian belief, it is founded on the creation of the world in six days (according to the account in Genesis), with a succeeding seventh day of rest, specially commemorated by the Jewish rest-day, or Sabbath, our Saturday. It has also been conjectured to represent a fourth of the lunar month of about 28 days; but no people is known as having made and maintained such a subdivision of the month. As a period and division of time, its use is limited to Jews and Christians (including also in some measure the Mohammedans, by derivation from these); but the week-day names and their succession are found more widely, and are of a wholly different origin; they rest upon an astrological principle, which assigns each day in succession to one of the planets as regent; and they further involve a division of the day into 24 hours. If the planets are arranged in the order of their distance from us as held by the ancients—namely, Saturn, Jupiter, Mars, Sun, Venus, Mercury, Moon,—then, if the first hour of a day is allotted to Saturn, and each following hour to the next planet, the 25th hour, or the first of the next day, will fall to the Sun, the 49th, or the first of the following day, to the Moon, and so to Mars, Mercury, Jupiter, Venus, in succession; and, each planet being reckoned as regent of the whole day of whose first hour it is regent, the days are Sun's day, Moon's day, Mars' day, and so on to Saturn's day, where the same succession is taken up anew. These names were unknown to, or at least never used by, the Jews, nor do they appear in classical Greek, nor do the Mohammedans employ them; but they passed from Roman use to European, and not only in their Latin forms, but also as translated into Germanic languages, the names of Germanic divinities being, by a rude identification, substituted in them for those of the Roman, as Mars, etc., without any regard to the planets (see the names Tuesday, etc.); and they are found also in India, which doubtless received them, with the rest of its astronomy and astrology, from Greece and Rome. The Indian days are coincident with our days of the same name—that is, it is Sun's day there when it is our Sunday, and so on. But there is no other than an astrological significance belonging to the names there; a week as a division of time is wholly unknown to both ancient and modern India. In law, week is sometimes construed to mean any period of seven full days, and sometimes to mean such a period beginning with the beginning of a Sunday. Thus, a requirement of "a week's notice" may be satisfied by the lapse of any seven consecutive days, but a publication of a notice "once in each week for three weeks before the sale" is held to contemplate three weeks reckoned as from Sunday to Sunday, not merely 21 days before the sale. Abbreviated w., wk.

By twyne the Cytee of Darke and the Cytee of Raphane ys a Ryvere, that men clepen Sabatorye. For on the Saturday hyt renneth faste; and alle the Wooke elles hyt stondeth stylle, and renneth nouzt or lytel.
Mandeville, Travels, p. 125.

I shal namore come here this wyke.
Chaucer, Troilus, ii. 430.

Nor can I go much to country-houses for the same reason. Say what they will, ladies do not like you to smoke in their bed-rooms; their silly little noses scent out the odour upon the chintz, weeks after you have left them.
Thackeray, Fitz-Boodle's Confessions.

2. The six working-days of the week; the week minus Sunday: as, to be paid so much a week.

Why such impress of shipwrights, whose sore task
Does not divide the Sunday from the week.
Shak., Hamlet, i. 1. 76.

A prophetic week, in Scrip., a week of years, or seven years.—A warp of weeks. See warp.—A week of Sundays, seven Sundays; hence, seven weeks, and, more loosely, a long time. weet2 (wēt), n., a., and v. A dialectal form of wet.

weet3 (wēt), a. A dialectal form of *wight*2.

weet4 (wēt), n. [Imitative.] The peetweet, or common sandpiper. See Tringoides.—Weet-my-feet, an imitative name for the common quail, Coturnix communis (or dactylisonans). [Prov. Eng. and Scotch.]

weet4 (wēt), v. i. [See *weet*4, n.] To cry as a weet or peetweet.

A sand-piper glided weet weeting along the shore.
S. Judd, Margaret, i. 2.

weet-bird (wēt'bėrd), n. [< *weet*4 + *bird*1. Cf. peetweet.] The wryneck, Iynx torquilla: from its cry. See cut under wryneck.

weeting†, weetingly†. See witting, wittingly.

weetless†, a. An obsolete form of witless.

weetweet (wēt'wēt), n. Same as *weet*4.

weever1†, n. Same as weaver-bird. Latham, 1782.

weever2 (wē'vėr), n. [Formerly spelled weaver, and appar. a particular use of *weaver*1. Zoologists now connect it with the L. specific name vipera, as if weever were a var. of the obs. wiver.] Either one of two British fishes of the genus Trachinus, the greater, T. draco, 10 or 12 inches long, and the lesser, T. vipera, of half this length; hence, any member of the Trachinidæ (which see). These fishes have sharp dorsal and opercular spines, with which they may inflict a painful and serious wound when incautiously handled. It does not appear that the spines convey a specific poison, but they are smeared with a slime which causes the puncture they inflict to fester, like the similar wound from the tail-spine of the sting-ray. See cut under Trachinus.

weever-fish (wē'vėr-fish), n. Same as *weever*2.

weevil (wē'vl), n. [Early mod. E. also weavil, ★weavel, wivel; < ME. wevel, wivel, wevyl, wyvel, < AS. wifel, in an early gloss wibil, a beetle (cf. wibba in scærn-wibba, dung-beetle), = OS. wivil = MLG. wevel = D. wevel = OHG. wibil, wibel, MHG. wibel, G. wiebel, wibel, a weevil, = Icel. yfill (in comp. tord-yfill, dung-beetle).] 1. A snout-beetle; any coleopterous insect of the section Rhynchophora (which see). The term is more properly restricted to the long-snouted forms of the family Curculionidæ, but is also extended (beyond the Rhynchophora) to the family Bruchidæ. The weevils are almost exclusively plant-feeders; most of them live in nuts, grains, the stems of plants, rolled-up leaves, catkins, or fruit, while others are leaf-miners, and a few live in gall-like excrescences on the stems or roots of plants. Brachytarsus contains the only carnivorous forms, and these are said to live on bark-lice. Some forms are subaquatic, as the water-weevil, Lissorhoptrus simplex. See phrases following, and cuts under Anthonomus, Balaninus, bean-weevil, Bruchus, Calandra, clover-weevil, Conotrachelus, diamond-beetle, Epicærus, pea-weevil, Pissodes, plum-gouger, Rhynchophora, and seed-weevil.

The wheat which is not turned is eaten with wiuels.
Guevara, Letters (tr. by Hellowes, 1577), p. 94.

About this time it chanced a pretty secret to be discouered to preserue their corne from the fly, or weauell, which did in a manner as much hurt as the rats.
Quoted in Capt. John Smith's Works, II. 161.

The Thunder, which went to Bermuda the 17th October, now returned, bringing corn and goats from Virginia, (for the weavils had taken the corn at Bermuda before they came there). Winthrop, Hist. New England, I. 159.

2. Any insect which damages stored grain, as the fly-weevil, a local name in the southern United States for the grain-moth, Sitotroga cerealella. See grain-moth, 2.—3. The larva of the wheat-midge, Diplosis tritici. Also called red weevil. C. V. Riley. [Western U. S.]—Apple-blossom weevil, Anthonomus pomorum, which attacks the flower-buds of the apple in Europe.—Apple-weevil, Anthonomus quadrigibbus, a weevil which infests the fruit of the apple in the United States. Commonly called apple-curculio. See apple-curculio, and cut under Anthonomus.—Cabbage-weevil, Ceuthorhynchus napi, whose larvæ bore the crown of young cabbages in Europe, and which is supposed to have been introduced recently into the United States.—Chestnut-weevil, Balaninus caryatripes, a very long-nosed weevil whose larva is the common chestnut-grub of the United States.—Clover-weevil. (a) See clover-weevil (with cut). (b) Phytonomus punctatus, whose larvæ feed on the leaves of clover in Europe and the United States. (c) Sitones crinitus and S. flavescens, which feed upon the leaves of clover in Europe, their larvæ boring in the roots. The latter has been introduced into the United States.—Cranberry-weevil, Anthonomus suturalis.—Grape-weevil. (a) Craponius inæqualis, which attacks the fruit of the grape in the United States. (b) Otiorhynchus sulcatus and O. picipes, which feed upon the leaves and shoots of the grape in Europe. (c) Rhynchites betuleti, a formidable grape-pest in Europe, which rolls the leaves of the vine.—Hazelnut-weevil, Balaninus nucum.—Hickory-nut weevil, Balaninus nasicus, whose larva is found commonly in hickory-nuts in the United States.—Imbricated weevil, Epicærus imbricatus, of the United States. See Epicærus (with cut).—Ironwood leaf-weevil, an undetermined weevil which mines the leaves of ironwood in the United States.—Leaf-rolling weevil, any weevil whose larva lives in a leaf-roll, as Attelabus bipunctulatus of the United States, whose larva rolls the leaves of oak.—New York weevil, Ithycerus noveboracensis, the adult of which gnaws the twigs of fruit-trees in the United States, while its larva devours the interior of oak and hickory-twigs.—Oak-bark weevil, Magdalis olyra, which lives under the bark of oak in the United States.—Palm-weevil, Rhynchophorus palmarum, R. ferrugineus, and allied species, which bore into the trunk of palm-trees. See palm-worm, under worm.—Pear-shaped weevil, any weevil of the genus Apion, as A. apricans, an enemy to clover in England. See cuts under clover-weevil and seed-weevil.—Pitch-eating weevil, Pachylobius picivorus, which lives under the bark of the pitch-pine in the United States.—Potato-stalk weevil, Trichobaris (or Baridius) trinotatus, a weevil whose larva bores the stalks of the potato in the middle United States.—Quince-weevil, Conotrachelus cratægi, which bores into the fruit of the quince in the United States.—Rhubarb-weevil, Lixus concavus, which bores the stems of rhubarb in the middle United States.—Rose-weevil, Aramigus fulleri, whose larva burrows in the roots of the rose.—Strawberry-weevil. (a) The strawberry-crown borer (which see, with cut, under strawberry), Tyloderma fragariæ, whose larva bores into the root-crown of the strawberry in the United States. (b) Anthonomus musculus, the adult of which destroys the blossoms and flower-stalks of the strawberry in the eastern United States.—White-pine weevil. See Pissodes (with cut). (See also acorn-weevil, bean-weevil, diamond-weevil, grain-weevil, nut-weevil, pea-weevil, pine-weevil, plum-weevil, rice-weevil, seed-weevil, water-weevil, wheat-weevil.)

New York Weevil (Ithycerus noveboracensis).
a, stem punctured by larva; b, pupa; c, beetle.

Quince-weevil (Conotrachelus cratægi).
a, side view; b, dorsal view. (Line shows natural size.)

weeviled, weevilled (wē'vld), a. [< weevil + *-ed*2.] Infested or infected with weevils, as grain.

weevily, weevilly (wē'vl-i), a. [< weevil + *-y*1.] Same as weeviled.

wee-wow1 (wē'wou), a. [Appar. a redupl. var. of wow*, < AS. wōh, crooked.] Wrong. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

wee-wow2 (wē'wou), v. [< *wee-wow*1, a.] To twist about in an irregular manner. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

weezel†, n. An old spelling of weasel.

weft1 (weft), n. [< ME. weft, < AS. weft, wefta (= Icel. veftr, also vipta, vifta), threads woven into and crossing the warp; with formative -t, < wefan, weave: see *weave*1.] 1. The threads, taken together, which run across the web from side to side, or from selvage to selvage. Also called woof.

The weft was so called from its being "wafted" in and out of the warp; it is also often called the woof, though more correctly the woof is the same as the web or finished stuff. Encyc. Brit., XXIII. 206.

2. In bot., a name sometimes given to a felt-like stratum produced in certain fungi by abundant closely interwoven hyphæ.

The peripheral portion of the delicate hyphal weft.
De Bary, Fungi (trans.), p. 217.

weft2†. An obsolete form of the preterit and past participle of *wave*1.

Ne can thy irrevocable desteny bee wefte.
Spenser, F. Q., III. iv. 36.

weft3†, n. Same as waif.

weft4 (weft), n. A dialectal form of waft, 3.

The strongest sort of smells are best in a weft afar off.
Bacon, Nat. Hist., § 833.

weftage† (wef'tāj), n. [< *weft*1 + -age.] Texture; the style or quality of the web, as of any textile fabric.

The whole muscles, as they lie upon the bones, might be truly tanned, whereby the weftage of the fibres might more easily be observed. Grew, Museum. (Latham.)

★weft-fork (weft'fôrk), n. 1. A device employed in some looms to lay in, piece by piece, a filling of slats, whalebone, palm-leaf, or other stiffening material.—2. An early arrangement for stopping a loom in case of the failure of the weft-thread. It is essentially a weighted lever, which is supported by the weft-thread, and performs its action by falling in the event of the breakage or failure of the thread.

weft-hook (weft'hůk), n. A tool used to draw the filling through the warp in some kinds of hand-weaving, as in slat-weaving and some narrow-ware weaving or ribbon-weaving.

wegge†, n. A Middle English form of *wedge*1.

wegh†, weigh3†, n. See wie.

weght, n. See wecht.

weghtnes†, n. Same as wightness.

weheet, n. See wighie.

wehrgeld, wehrgelt, n. See wergild.

wehrlite (wār'lit), n. [Named after Aloys Wehrle, an Austrian metallurgist and mining official (1791–1835).] A mineral obtained from Deutsch-Pilsen, in Hungary, in steel-gray folia with bright metallic luster and high specific gravity (8.4). It consists essentially of bismuth and tellurium, and some analyses show the presence of a small amount of silver. It is allied to tetradymite, but its exact composition is uncertain, and it is possible that more than one species may be included under the name.

wehr-wolf†, n. See werwolf.

wei†, n. An old spelling of way.

weibyeite, n. A rare fluo-carbonate of the metals of the cerium group, occurring in minute white crystals in southern Norway.

weid (wēd), n. Same as *weed*3.

Weierstrassian (vī-ėr-stras'i-an), a. Of or pertaining to, or named from, K. T. W. Weierstrass, a German mathematician (1816–1897).—Weierstrassian function. (a) One of the functions used in Weierstrass's method of treating elliptic functions. (b) The function

In certain cases, as when $p = 1$, $b < 1$, $ab > 1 + \frac{3}{2}\pi$, this function, although continuous, has no differential coefficient. In fact, the curve of the function, when seen at a distance, appears like a simple curve of sines; but when it is magnified, small waves are seen upon it; under a higher magnifying power, wavelets on these waves; and so on ad infinitum; so that, although $f(x + h) - fx$ becomes infinitesimal with h, yet it has no limiting ratio to h.

Weigela (wī'jē-lā), n. [NL. (Thunberg, 1780), named for C. E. Weigel, a German botanist.] See Diervilla. Also Weigelia (Persoon, 1805).

Weigert's method. The method of tracing the course of the medullated nerve-fibers by hardening and staining them.

weigh1 (wā), v. [Early mod. E. also way; < ME. weien, weyen, wegen (pret. wei, wai, weze, weie, wogh, pp. weien, iweze, iweie, wowin), < AS. wegan (pret. wæg, pp. wegen), carry, bear, also intr. move, = OFries. wega, weia = MD. weghen, D. wegen, weigh, = OHG. wegan, MHG. wegen, move, G. wegen in comp. bewegen, move, also in var. forms wiegen, rock, wägen, weigh, = Icel. vega, move, carry, lift, weigh, = Sw. väga, weigh, = Dan. veie, weigh, = Goth. gawigan, move, shake about, = OBulg. vesti, go, move, = L. vehere, carry, = Gr. ἔχειν, ὀχεῖσθαι = Skt.

√ vah, go, move. The orig. sense 'carry' passed into that of 'raise, lift,' and thence into that of 'weigh.' Hence ult. (< AS. wegan, etc.) wag[1], wagon, wain[1], way[1], wight[1], whit, and (< L. vehere) vehicle, convection, etc.: see esp. way[1].] I. trans. 1. To raise or lift; bear up: as, to weigh anchor; to weigh a ship that has been sunk.

And so ye same mornyng we wayde our ancre and made sayle, and come into the foresayd hauyn at Mylo.
Sir R. Guylforde, Pylgrymage, p. 63.

[The ship] struck upon a rock, and, being forced to run ashore to save her men, could never be weighed since, although she lies a great height above the water.
Winthrop, Hist. New England, I. 3.

2. To bear up or balance in order to determine the weight of; determine the relative heaviness of (something) by comparison in a balance with some recognized standard; ascertain the number of pounds, ounces, etc., in: as, to weigh sugar; to weigh gold.

Like stuffe haue I read in S. Francis Legend, of the ballance wherein mens deedes are weighed, and the Deuill lost his prey by the weight of a Chalice.
Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 140.

The hunter took up his rifle instinctively from the corner of the room, weighed it in both hands held palm upward.
W. M. Baker, New Timothy, p. 297.

3. To consider or examine for the purpose of forming an opinion or coming to a conclusion; compare; estimate deliberately and maturely; balance; ponder: as, to weigh the advantages and disadvantages of a scheme.

In noble corage oghte been areste,
And weyen every thing by equitee.
Chaucer, Good Women, l. 398.

Wherefore I pray you weigh this with yourself the better, and see whether you can espy how your doctrine is doubtful. J. Bradford, Letters (Parker Soc., 1853), II. 130.

Regard not who it is which speaketh, but weigh only what is spoken. Hooker, Eccles. Polity, Pref., i.

Weigh oath with oath, and you will nothing weigh.
Shak., M. N. D., iii. 2. 131.

4†. To consider as worthy of notice; make account of; care for; regard; esteem.

You weigh me not! O, that's you care not for me.
Shak., L. L. L., v. 2. 27.

You are light, gentlemen,
Nothing to weigh your hearts.
Fletcher and Shirley, Night-Walker, i. 1.

5. To overweigh or overpower; burden; oppress. See the following phrase.—To weigh down. (a†) To preponderate over.

He weighs King Richard down.
Shak., Rich. II., iii. 4. 89.

(b) To oppress with weight or heaviness; overburden; depress.

Thou [sleep] no more wilt weigh my eyelids down.
Shak., 2 Hen. IV., iii. 1. 7.

II. intrans. 1. To weigh anchor; get under way or in readiness to sail.

When he was aboard his bark, he weighed and set sail, and shot off all his guns.
Winthrop, Hist. New England, II. 232.

The vessel weighs, forsakes the shore,
And lessens to the sight.
Cowper, The Bird's Nest.

2. To have weight, literally or figuratively.

Alliances, how near soever, weigh but light in the Scales of State. Baker, Chronicles, p. 117.

3. To be or amount in heaviness or weight; be of equal effect with in the balance: as, a nugget weighing several ounces; a load which weighs two tons. The terms expressing the weight are in the adverbial objective. That which a balance measures is the proportionate acceleration of masses toward the center of the earth. This is equal to their proportionate masses; and mass is the important quantity determined. The weight, or attraction of gravitation (less the centrifugal force), differs at different stations, and is not determined by the operation of weighing.

And the Frensshe kyng gaue hym a goblet of syluer weynge iiii. marke.
Berners, tr. of Froissart's Chron., II. lxxxvii.

Master Featherstone, O Master Featherstone, you may now make your fortunes weigh ten stone of feathers more than ever they did!
Dekker and Webster, Northward Ho, v. 1.

4. To be considered as important; have weight in the intellectual balance.

He finds . . . that the same argument which weighs with him has weighed with thousands . . . before him.
Bp. Atterbury, Sermons, II. ii.

Such considerations never weigh with them.
Goldsmith, Citizen of the World, xci.

5. To bear heavily; press hard.

Cleanse the stuff'd bosom of that perilous stuff
Which weighs upon the heart.
Shak., Macbeth, v. 3. 45.

6. To consider; reflect.

My tongue was never oil'd with "Here, an 't like you," "There, I beseech you"; weigh, I am a soldier,
And truth I covet only, no fine terms, sir.
Fletcher, Loyal Subject, ii. 1.

The soldiers, less weighing because less knowing, clamoured to be led on against any danger.
Milton, Hist. Eng., ii.

To weigh down, to sink by its own weight or burden.

The softness of the stalk, which maketh the bough, being over-loaden, . . . weigh down.
Bacon, Nat. Hist., § 610.

To weigh in, in sporting, to ascertain one's weight before the contest. Whyte Melville, White Rose, I. xiv.

★ weigh[1] (wā), n. [< weigh[1], v.] A certain quantity or measure, estimated by weight; a measure of weight (compare wey); in the South Wales coal-fields, a weight of ten tons.

weigh[2] (wā), n. A misspelling of way[1], in the phrase under way, due to confusion with the phrase to weigh anchor.

We lost no time in getting under weigh again.
B. Taylor, Lands of the Saracen, p. 230.

weigh[3]†, n. See wegh.

weighable (wā'a-bl), a. [< weigh[1] + -able.] Capable of being weighed.

weighage (wā'āj), n. [< weigh[1] + -age.] A rate or toll paid for the weighing of goods. Imp. Dict.

weigh-bauk (wā'bâk), n. The beam of a balance; hence, in the plural, a pair of scales. [Scotch.]

Capering in the air in a pair of weigh-bauks, now up, now down. Scott, Redgauntlet, xxiv. (Encyc. Dict.) weigh-beam (wā'bēm), n. A weighing-scale carried by a wooden or iron horse, for convenience in weighing freight at a dock or railroad-station; a portable scale used by custom-house weighers, etc.

weigh-board (wā'bōrd), n. In mining. See way-board.

weigh-bridge (wā'brij), n. A weighing-machine for weighing carts, wagons, etc., with their load.

weigh-can (wā'kan), n. A reservoir from which supplies are drawn, so connected with a scale that any desired weight may be conveniently drawn out.

weighed† (wād), a. Balanced; experienced.

A young man not weighed in state matters. Bacon.

weigher (wā'ėr), n. [< ME. weyere (= MLG. MHG. weger); < weigh[1] + -er[1].] 1. One who or that which weighs; an officer whose duty it is to weigh commodities or test weights.—2†. The equator.

This same cercle is cleped also the weyere (equator) of the day, for, whan the sonne is in the hevedes of Aries and Libra, than ben the daies and the nyhtes illike of lenghthe in the world. Chaucer, Astrolabe, i. sec. 17.

Sacker and weigher. See sacker[1].

weighership (wā'ėr-ship), n. [< weigher + -ship.] The office of weigher.

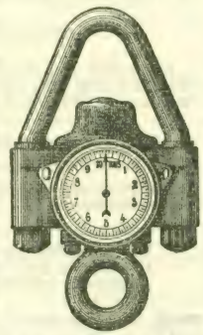
weigh-house (wā'hous), n. A building (generally of a public character) at or in which goods are weighed by suitable apparatus.



He shall, with an hour's lying in the pulpit, get enough to find thirty or forty sturdy lubbers a month long, of which the weakest shall be as strong in the belly, when he cometh unto the manger, as the mightiest porter in the weigh-house.
Tyndale, Ans. to Sir T. More, etc. (Parker Soc., 1850), p. 76.

weighing (wā'ing), n. [< ME. weyynge, weynge; verbal n. of weigh[1], v.] 1. The act of ascertaining weight.—2. As much as is weighed at once: as, a weighing of beef. Imp. Dict.—3. Same as weighting.

weighing-cage (wā'ing-kāj), n. A cage in which living animals, as pigs, sheep, and calves, may be conveniently weighed.

weighing-house (wā'ing-hous), n. Same as weigh-house.

weighing-machine (wā'ing-ma-shēn″), n. Any contrivance by which the weight of an object may be ascertained, as the common balance, spring-balance, steelyard, etc. See cuts under balance and steelyard. The term is, however, generally applied only to those contrivances which are employed for ascertaining the weight of heavy bodies, as the machines for the purpose of determining the weights of laden vehicles, machines for weighing cattle, machines for weighing heavy goods, as large casks, bales, etc. The hydrostatic weighing-machine (see cut) consists essentially of a strong cylinder within which moves a tightly packed piston, the space being filled with castor-oil; the loop above is attached to the cylinder and the ring below to the piston. When the object to be weighed is hung on the ring, the piston presses on the oil, and this passes by a channel to a gage which indicates by the motion of the index on the dial the weight in pounds and tons.

Hydrostatic Weighing-machine.

weighing-scoop (wā'ing-sköp), n. A combined scoop and spring-balance. The spring is in the handle of the scoop, and while the scoop is being filled the spring is held in place by a stop controlled by the thumb. On raising the loaded scoop the stop is released, and the weight of the contents is indicated on the handle. E. H. Knight.

weigh-lock (wā'lok), n. A canal-lock at which barges are weighed and their tonnage is settled.

weighman (wā'man), n.; pl. weighmen (-men). A weigher. [Rare.]

Two weeks after the coopers' strike came the strike of the lightermen and weighmen.
U. S. Cons. Rep., No. lxv. (1886), p. 266.

weigh-shaft (wā'shâft), n. In a steam-engine, a rocking-shaft or rocker-shaft.

★ weight[1] (wāt), n. [Formerly also waight; < ME. weight, weihte, weigte, weght, wight, wigt, < AS. gewiht, weight, = MLG. wicht, gewicht = D. gewigt = OHG. gewiht*, MHG. gewiht, gewihte, G. gewicht, weight, = Icel. vætt = Sw. vigt = Dan. vægt, weight; with formative -t, < AS. wegan, etc., raise, lift: see weigh[1]. The reg. mod. form would be wight (parallel with night, sight, etc.); the present vowel-form is due to conformity with the verb weigh[1].] 1. Downward force of a body; gravity; heaviness; ponderousness; more exactly, the resultant of the force of the earth's gravitation and of the centrifugal pressure from its axis of rotation, considered as a property of the body affected by it. Considerable confusion has existed between weight and mass, the latter being the quantity of matter as measured by the ratio of the momentum of a body to its velocity. Weight, in this the proper sense of the word, is something which varies with the latitude of the station at which the heavy body is, being greater by $\frac{1}{185}$ of itself at the poles than at the equator; it also varies considerably with the elevation above the sea ($\frac{3}{1000}$ for every kilometer). The weights of different bodies at one and the same station were proved, by Newton's experiments with pendulums of different material, to be in the ratio of their masses, and irrespective of their chemical composition; consequently, a balance which shows the equality of weight of two bodies at one station also shows the equality of their masses. In determining the specific gravity of a body, it is hung by a fine thread to one pan of the balance, and immersed completely in water. The reduced number of pounds, ounces, etc., which is required in the other pan to balance the first, under these circumstances, is called the weight of the body in water. In like manner, we speak of the weight in air and the weight in water. These expressions forbid our conceiving of weight as synonymous with the quantity of matter; and yet, when a pound is said to be a unit of weight, although it is intended to be carried up mountains and to distant places, mass, or quantity of matter, must be understood, since there is no important quantity but the quantity of matter which a pound or a kilogram measures. The confusion is increased when the pound is defined, as it still is in the United States, by the weight of a certain standard in air, without reference to the height of the barometer and thermometer. In the older books on mechanics, a pound is taken as a force, and the quantity of matter is obtained by dividing the weight by the measure of gravity; but now both the theoretical books and the legal definitions of the standards used in weighing make the pound, kilo, etc., to be masses, or quantities of matter, whose weight is obtained by multiplying them by the acceleration of gravity at any station. Nevertheless, the older system still finds a few supporters. It was long after Galileo had firmly established the law of falling bodies before it occurred to anybody that weight was a force. Gravity, so far as common observation shows, draws bodies to the earth alone, and that in parallel lines, and Galileo had shown that it accelerates all bodies alike, whether they are great or small, so that there was nothing to suggest the idea of force, especially as that idea was then in its infancy, and had not attained its present prominence in the minds of men. Weight in those days being looked upon as a property of single bodies, and not as subsisting between pairs of bodies, was necessarily confounded with mass; and a mental inertia, or natural clinging to old conceptions, kept up the confusion after Newton had demonstrated the true law of gravitation. For the units of weight, see def. 5. Abbreviated wt.

Allas that I bihighte
Of pured gold a thousand pound of wighte.
Chaucer, Franklin's Tale, l. 832.

So Belgian mounds bear on their shattered sides
The sea's whole weight, increased with swelling tides.
Addison, The Campaign.

Though a pound or a gramme is the same all over the world, the weight of a pound or a gramme is greater in high latitudes than near the equator.
Clerk Maxwell, Matter and Motion, Art. xlvii.

2. Mass; relative quantity of matter.—3. A heavy mass; specifically, something used on account of its weight or its mass. Thus, the usefulness of the weights that a man holds in his hands in leaping or jumping lies in the addition they impart to his momentum, and their dragging him down is a disadvantage; but the weights of a clock are for giving a downward pull, and their momentum is practically nothing.

A man leapeth better with weights in his hands than without. Bacon, Nat. Hist., § 699.

Both men and women in Cochin account it a great Gallantrie to haue wide eares, which therfore they stretch by arte, hanging waights on them till they reach to their shoulders. Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 494.

Impartial Justice holds her equal Scales,
Till stronger Virtue does the Weight incline.
Prior, Ode to the Queen, st. 10.

"When I said I would match you, I meant with even weight; you ride four stone lighter than I." "Very well, but I am content to carry weight." Scott, Rob Roy, iii.

4. Specifically, a body of determinate mass, intended to be used on a balance or scale for measuring the weight or mass of the body in the other pan or part of the scale (as the platform in a platform-scale).—5. A system of units for expressing the weight or mass of bodies. Avoirdupois weight is founded on the avoirdupois pound (see pound[1]), which is equal to 453.592 grams. It is divided into 16 ounces, and each ounce into 16 drams; 112 (in the United States and Canada 100) pounds make a hundredweight, and 20 hundredweights a ton. (See ton[1].) The stone is 14 pounds. Troy weight is founded on the troy pound, which is 373.242 grams. It is divided into 12 ounces, each ounce into 20 pennyweights, and each pennyweight into 24 grains. But formerly the pennyweight was divided into 32 real grains. There was also an ideal subdivision of the grain into 20 mites, each of 24 droites, each of 20 peroits, each of 24 blanks. The goldsmiths also divided the ounce troy into 24 carats of 4 grains each for gold and silver, and into 150 carats of 4 grains each for diamonds. Troy weight, formerly employed for many purposes, is now only used for gold and silver. Apothecaries' weight, still used in the United States for dispensing medicine, divides the troy ounce into 8 drams, each dram into 3 scruples, and each scruple into 20 grains, which are identical with troy grains. For weight in the metric system, see metric[3].

6. Pressure; burden; care; responsibility.

A wise Chieftain neuer trusts the waight
Of th' execution of a braue Exploit
But vnto those whom he most honoureth.
Sylvester, tr. of Du Bartas's Weeks, i. 7.

The weight of mightiest monarchies.
Milton, P. L., ii. 307.

Why does that lovely Head, like a fair Flow'r Oppress'd with Drops of a hard-falling Show'r, Bend with its Weight of Grief? Congreve, To Cynthia.

7. In coal-mining, subsidence of the roof due to pressure from above, which takes effect as the coal is worked away. In long-wall working, the weight is usually of importance, as causing the coal, after it has been holed, to "get itself"—that is, to break down without the necessity of using powder, wedges, or something similar. Properly, "weight" is the cause and "weighting" the result, but the two words are often used with nearly the same meaning.

8. Importance; specifically, the importance of a fact as evidence tending to establish a conclusion; efficacy; power of influencing the conduct of persons and the course of events; effective influence in general. In calculations by least squares, the weight assigned to an observation is its effect upon the result, expressed by its equivalence to a certain number of concordant observations of standard accuracy.

It happens many times that, to vrge and enforce the matter we speake of, we go still mounting by degrees and encreasing our speech with wordes or with sentences of more waight one then another, & is a figure of great both efficacie & ornament. . . . We call this figure by the Greeke originall, the Auancer or figure of encrease, because euery word that is spoken is one of more weight then another. Puttenham, Arte of Eng. Poesie, p. 182.

For weill aneughe they understood
The matter was of weght.
Battle of Balrinnes (Child's Ballads, VII. 223).

As men are in quality and as their services are in weight for the public good, so likewise their rewards and encouragements . . . might somewhat declare how the state itself doth accept their pains.
Hooker, Eccles. Polity, v. 81.

If the people of Ireland were a united nation, it is conceivable that their demand for autonomy would have weight. Edinburgh Rev., CLXIII. 568.

9. In med., a sensation of oppression or heaviness over the whole body or over a part of it, as the head or stomach.—Atomic weight. See atomic.—Dead weight, the pressure produced by a heavy body supported in a state of rest by anything: used literally and figuratively.

The huge dead weight of stupidity and indolence is always ready to smother audacious enquiries.
Leslie Stephen, Eng. Thought, i. § 17.

I feel so free and so clear
By the loss of that dead weight.
Tennyson, Maud, xix. 10.

Fisherman's weight. See fisherman.—Gross weight, the weight before deduction for tare, impurity, or other similar correction: in contradistinction to net or suttle weight.—Lazy, net, tron weight. See the qualifying words.—Mercurial-weight thermometer. Same as overflowing thermometer (which see, under thermometer).—Molecular weight, the weight of a molecule, that of hydrogen being taken as the standard.—Weight of an observation, the number of ordinary observations to which it is considered as equivalent in the deduction of the most probable value. Compare def. 8.—Weight of a reciprocant. See reciprocant.—Weight of metal, the weight of iron capable of being thrown at one discharge from all the guns of a ship.—Weight of wind, in organ-building, the degree of compression in the air furnished by the bellows to a particular stop or group of stops. The usual pressure is sufficient to raise a column of water in a U-tube about 3 inches.

weight[1] (wāt), v. t. [< weight[1], n.] 1. To add or attach a weight or weights to; load with additional weight; add to the heaviness of.

Some of the [balance] poles are weighted at both ends, but ours are not. Mayhew, London Labour and London Poor.

2. In dyeing, to load (the threads) with minerals or other foreign matters mixed with the dyes, for the purpose of making the fabrics appear thick and heavy.

Barytes . . . is used for weighting, that is, for giving weight and apparent body and firmness to inferior goods.
O'Neill, Dyeing and Calico Printing, p. 74.

3. In founding, to bind (the parts of a flask) together by means of weights placed on the top, in order to prevent the bursting of the flask under the lifting effect of the liquid metal.

Weingarten's theorem. See theorem.

Weinmannia (wīn-man'i-ä), n. [NL. (Linnæus, 1763), named after J. W. Weinmann, a German apothecary.] A genus of dicotyledonous choripetalous plants, belonging to the family Cunoniaceæ. It is characterized by flowers with imbricated sepals, four or five petals, eight or ten long stamens inserted on the base of a free disk, and small oblong, commonly pilose seeds. There are about 70 species, principally of tropical or south temperate regions, occurring in America, Australia, New Zealand, and the Mascarene and Pacific islands. They are trees or shrubs with opposite branchlets, opposite coriaceous, often glandular leaves, odd-pinnate with a winged rachis. The small white flowers are disposed in simple terminal or axillary erect racemes, followed by small coriaceous two-celled capsules splitting into two sharp boat-like valves. Some species afford a soft light wood used in carpentry and cabinet-work. A Peruvian species yields an astringent bark utilized in tanning. W. tinctoria is employed in the Isle of Bourbon in dyeing red. W. pinnata, a tree with downy branches, native from the West Indies and Mexico to Guiana, is known in Jamaica as bastard braziletto. W. rubifolia, a small tree of New South Wales, is there called corkwood, and one occurs in New Zealand, W. racemosa, a small tree with blackish bark, now cultivated in England, and known as the tawai-bark tree.

★weir, wear[3] (wēr), n. [The spelling weir is irreg. and appar. Sc.; the proper spelling is wear; early mod. E. wear, weare, were, sometimes wire; < ME. wer (dat. were), < AS. wer, a weir, dam, fence, hedge, inclosure, = G. wehr, a weir, dam, dike, = Icel. vörr, a fenced-in landing-place; from the root of AS. werian, protect, guard, defend, etc., also fence, dam: see wear[2].] 1. A dam erected across a river to stop and raise the water, as for the purpose of taking fish, of conveying a stream to a mill, of maintaining the water at the level required for navigating it, or for purposes of irrigation.

Half the river fell over a high weir, with all its appendages of bucks, and hatchways, and eel-baskets, into the Nun's-pool. Kingsley, Yeast, iii.

2. A fence, as of twigs or stakes, set in a stream for catching fish. Weirs differ from pounds principally in being constructed, in whole or in part, of brush or of narrow boards, with or without netting; and they are sometimes arranged so that at low tide a sand-bar cuts off the escape of the fish, leaving them in a basin, and allowing them to be taken at any time before a certain stage of rise of the next tide. Weirs are of two kinds, the shoal-water weir and the deep-water weir. The shoal-water weir, as illustrated in fig. 1, has a leader L, which is a row of stakes, generally woven with brush, leading out from the shore. Its extremity is at the entrance of the big pound M. The big pound is likewise of stakes filled with brush, and its entrance 30 feet wide. This leads by a passage 5 feet wide into the little pound N, and this into the pocket O, which is a frame about 16 feet long and 10 feet wide, with sides of netting, and a board floor. The fish following the shore meet the leader, turn and follow it into the big pound; here they follow the side around until they pass into the little pound, and from that into the pocket, where they are left by the receding tide and taken out at low water. The deep-water weir (fig. 2) has a similar leader A, extending to the entrance of the big pound, or heart, B, beyond which are the small pound C and the bowl D, into which the fish finally go. The form of the inclosures in both cases leads the fish constantly forward, and they rarely or never find their way back through the passages. In both figures E represents the land or high-water mark, and F the low-water mark.

1, shoal-water weir; 2, deep-water weir.

The day following we came to Chippanum, where the people were fled, but their wires afforded us fish.
Quoted in Capt. John Smith's Works, I. 90.

Deep-water weir. See def. 2.—Dry weir, a weir on a flat which is left bare at ebb-tide.—Half-tide weir, a fish-weir so placed that the fish taken can be removed at half-ebb or half-tide, without waiting for low tide, as is generally done.—Lock-weir, a weir having a lock-chamber and gates. E. H. Knight.—Shoal-water weir. See def. 2.—Slat weir. See slat[3].

weld[1], wold[2] (weld, wōld), n. [Also Sc. wald; < ME. welde, walde, wolde, weld, dyers' yellow-weed; cf. D. wouw = Sw. Dan. vau = G. wau, waude, wied (> F. gaude = Sp. gualda = Pg. gualde), weld. Further connections uncertain. Some compare woad, and, for the root, the verb well[1], boil.] The dyer's-weed, Reseda Luteola, a scentless species of mignonette, native in southern Europe and naturalized further north. It was formerly much cultivated as a dye-plant, its pods affording a permanent yellow suited to both animal and vegetable fibers, later displaced, however, by quercitron, flavin, and the aniline dyes. Its seeds yield a drying-oil. Also yellow-weed, and sometimes woad or wild woad.

weld[2] (weld), v. [Ult. a variant, through the Scand. forms, of well, boil: see well[1].] I. trans. 1. To unite or consolidate, as pieces of metal or a metallic sponge, by hammering or compression with or without previous softening by heat. Welding is and has long been a matter of great practical importance, chiefly in the manufacture of iron and steel, and of the various tools, utensils, and implements made of those metals. Iron has the valuable property of continuing in a kind of pasty condition through quite a wide range of temperature below its melting-point, and this is a circumstance highly favorable to the process of welding. Most metals, however, pass quickly, when sufficiently heated, from a solid to a liquid condition, and with such welding is more difficult. The term welding is more generally used when the junction of the pieces is effected without the actual fusing-point of the metal having been reached. Sheets of lead have sometimes been united together by fusing the metal with a blowpipe along the two edges in contact with each other, and this has been called autogenous soldering, or burning if the heating was done with a hot iron. Still, "the difference between welding and autogenous soldering is only one or degree" (Percy). The term welding is also used in speaking of the uniting of articles not metallic. Most metals when in the form of powder can be consolidated or welded into a perfectly homogeneous mass by sufficient pressure, without the aid of heat. The same is true of various non-metallic substances, such as graphite, coal, and probably many others. A method of welding invented by Elihu Thomson has been used which is employed with a variety of metals on an extensive scale. In this, which is known as electric welding, a current of electricity heats the abutting ends of the two objects which are to be welded, these being then pressed together by mechanical force, and so arranged with reference to the electric current that there is a great and rapid accumulation of heat at the joint, in consequence of the greater relative conductivity of the rest of the circuit. This method of welding in some cases partakes of the nature of autogenous soldering, the pieces of metal being actually fused while uniting; in other cases, as with iron, nickel, or platinum, the union may take place without fusion, as in ordinary welding. In electric welding the pressure which forces the metallic surfaces together may, in the case of a plastic metal like iron, be either quiet or percussive in character; in autogenous soldering a more delicate and quiet pressure is generally preferred. In case of large articles hydraulic pressure can be used to force their surfaces into contact with each other.

To weld anew the chain
On that red anvil where each blow is pain.
Whittier, A Word for the Hour.

2. Figuratively, to bring into intimate union; make a close joining of: as, to weld together the parts of an argument.

How he . . . slow re-wrought
That Language—welding words into the crude Mass from the new speech round him.
Browning, Sordello, ii.

II. intrans. To undergo the welding process; be capable of being welded.

weld[2] (weld), n. [< weld[2], v.] A solid union of metallic pieces formed by welding; a welded junction or joint.

Sound welds are very difficult to make in wire, and are not to be trusted. R. S. Culley, Pract. Teleg., § 311.

weld[3]†, v. t. A Middle English form of wield.

weldability (wel-da-bil'i-ti), n. [< weldable + -ity (see -bility).] Capability of being welded.

The above-mentioned elements harden malleable iron, and probably affect its weldability by their ready oxidability. W. H. Greenwood, Steel and Iron, p. 8.

weldable (wel'da-bl), a. [< weld[2] + -able.] Capable of being welded.

weld-bore (weld'bōr), n. A kind of woolen cloth made at Bradford, in Yorkshire, England. Dict. of Needlework.

welder[1] (wel'dėr), n. [< weld[2] + -er[1].] One who welds, or an instrument or appliance for welding.

welder[2]†, n. An obsolete form of wielder.

welding-heat (wel'ding-hēt), n. See heat.

welding-machine (wel'ding-ma-shēn″), n. ★A machine by which the edges of plates previously bent are joined. The edges are made to lap inside a chamber, and are exposed to a gas-flame, whence the joint is passed beneath a gang of rolls or a hammer.

welding-powder (wel'ding-pou″dėr), n. A flux for use in heating metal for welding, consisting of a calcined powder formed from borax and other ingredients.

welding-swage (wel'ding-swāj), n. A block or a fulling-tool used in closing a welded joint. E. H. Knight.

weld-iron (weld'ī″ėrn), n. A name sometimes applied to wrought-iron. It indicates a product of varying carbon contents, which in the process of its manufacture has not been fused subsequent to a first decarburization. This name was recommended by an international committee appointed by the American Institute of Mining Engineers, but has not been generally adopted; indeed the institute did not accept the report of its committee in so far as this modification of the established nomenclature of iron is concerned.

weldless (weld'les), a. [< weld + less.] Having no welds; made without welding.

weld-steel (weld'stēl), n. An alloy of iron and carbon. It contains more of the latter than weld-iron (which see), but has not been fused in the process of producing its market shape after the chemical reactions of the manufacturing process have been completed. This name was suggested by a committee appointed by the American Institute of Mining Engineers, but has not been generally adopted.

weldy (wel'di), a. An obsolete or dialectal form of wieldy.

wele†. A Middle English form of weal[1], well[2].

welefult, a. Another spelling of wealful.

welewt, v. A Middle English form of wallow[2].

First a man growith as dooth a gras,
And anoon after welewith as flouris of hay.
Political Poems, etc. (ed. Furnivall), p. 173.

welfare (wel'fār), n. [< ME. welfare (= MLG. wolvare); < well[2] + fare[1].] 1. A state or condition of doing well; prosperous or satisfactory course or relation; exemption from evil; state with respect to well-being: as, to promote the physical or the spiritual welfare of society; to inquire after a friend's welfare; to be anxious about the welfare of a ship at sea.

My daughter's welfare I do feare.
The Merchant's Daughter (Child's Ballads, IV. 332).

He [James II.] seems to have determined to make some amends for neglecting the welfare of his own soul by taking care of the souls of others. Macaulay, Hist. Eng., vi.

2†. A source of well-being; a blessing; a good.

Lith Troylus, byraft of eche welfare,
Ybounden in the blake bark of care.
Chaucer, Troilus, iv. 228.

welk[1], n. Same as whelk[1].

welk[2]† (welk), v. i. [< ME. welken, fade, vanish, wither, = D. welken = OHG. welchen, MHG. G. welken, wither; from an adj. seen in OHG. welc, welch, MHG. G. welk, moist, mild, soft, withered; cf. OBulg. vlaga, moisture, dampness, vlŭgŭkŭ, moist, Lith. vilgyti, make moist; prob. from a root welg*, be moist. Cf. welkin.] 1. To fade; decline; decrease.

But nowe sadde Winter welked hath the day.
Spenser, Shep. Cal., November.

Now seven times Phœbus had his welked wain
Upon the top of Cancer's tropic set.
Drayton, Baron's Wars, iv. 1.

2. To wither; wrinkle; shrivel.

Ful pale and welked is my face.
Chaucer, Pardoner's Tale, l. 276.

welk[3], n. Same as whelk[2].

welked, a. See whelked.

welkin (wel'kin), n. and a. [< ME. welken, welkine, welkne, walkyn, wolkne, wolcne, weolcne, the welkin, the sky, the region of clouds, orig. 'the clouds,' < AS. wolcnu, clouds, pl. of wolcen, a cloud, = OS. wolkan = OFries. wolken, ulken = MD. wolcke, D. wolk = LG. wulke = OHG. wolchan, also wolcha, MHG. wolken, wolke, G. wolke, a cloud; prob. orig. [Now used chiefly in poetry.]

The see may ebbe and flowen more or lesse,
The welkne hath might to shyne, reyne, or hayle.
Chaucer, Fortune, l. 62.

All the heavens revolve
In the small welkin of a drop of dew.
Lowell, Under the Willows.

II. a. Sky-blue. [Rare.]

Come, sir page,
Look on me with your welkin eye: sweet villain!
Shak., W. T., i. 2. 136.

welky, a. See whelky.

well[1] (wel), v. i. [< ME. wellen, < AS. wellan, wyllan, well or spring up (= OHG. wellōn, MHG. G. wellen, well up, = Icel. vella, make to boil), a secondary form, associated with the noun well[1], from the orig. strong verb AS. weallan (= OFries. walla = OS. OHG. wallan = Icel. vella = Sw. välla = Dan. vælde), boil, well up: see wall[2], and cf. well[1], n. Cf. also weld[2].] I. intrans. To issue forth, as water from the earth or from a spring; spring; flow up or out.

She no lenger myght restreyne
Hir teres, they gonne soo up to welle.
Chaucer, Troilus, iv. 709.

From out the sounding cells
What a gush of euphony voluminously wells!
Poe, The Bells, ii.

The springs that welled
Beneath the touch of Milton's rod.
Whittier, Rantoul.

II. trans. 1†. To boil.

He made him drynke led [lead] iweld and In is mouth halde it there. Holy Rood (E. E. T. S.), p. 58.

2. To pour forth from or as if from a well or spring. Spenser.

It was like visiting some classic fountain, that had once welled its pure waters in a sacred shade, but finding it dry and dusty. Irving, Sketch-Book, p. 30.

well[1] (wel), n. [< ME. wel (well-), also welle, wulle, wille, < AS. well, wyll, also wella, wylla, a well, spring (= MD. welle, D. wel = OHG. wella, MHG. G. welle, a wave, billow, surge, = Icel. vella, boiling, ebullition, = Dan. væld (for væll*), a spring), < weallan, boil: see wall[2], and cf. wall[2], n., and well[1], v.] 1. A natural source of water; a place where water springs up in or issues from the ground; a spring or well-spring; a fountain. As soon as a spring begins to be utilized as a source of water-supply it is more or less thoroughly transformed into a well. (See def. 4.) This is necessary, both for rendering the access to it convenient, and for giving the water a chance to accumulate and be protected when not needed for use. Hence the word spring is much used by geologists in describing the natural sources of water-supply, and well, by those indicating the manner in which the supply has been made available. There is, however, no sharp distinction possible between the two words. Thus, Prestwich speaks of the "beautiful spring [between Cirencester and Cheltenham] known as the Seven Wells," and Phillips of a "feeble intermittent spring [issuing from Giggleswick Scar, in Yorkshire] known as the Ebbing and Flowing Well."

Ther were a fewe welles Came renning fro the cliffes adoun.
Chaucer, Death of Blanche, l. 160.

Ther sprong welles thre, . . .
Of watyr bothe fayr & good.
Political Poems, etc. (ed. Furnivall), p. 118.

Begin then, Sisters of the sacred well
That from beneath the seat of Jove doth spring.
Milton, Lycidas, l. 15.

He deep comfort hath
Who, thirsting, drinks cool waters from a well.
R. W. Gilder, The Celestial Passion, Love and Death.

Hence—2. The source whence any series or order of things issues or is drawn; a well-spring of origin or supply; a fount in the figurative sense.

He that is of worthinesse the welle.
Chaucer, Troilus, ii. 178.

Dan Chaucer, well of English undefyled.
Spenser, F. Q., IV. ii. 32.

3. That which flows or springs out or up from a source; water or other fluid issuing forth.

And from his gored wound a well of bloud did gush.
Spenser, F. Q., I. iii. 35.

The water that I shall give him shall be in him a well of water springing up into everlasting life. John iv. 14.

4. A pit, hole, or shaft sunk in the ground, either by digging or by boring through earth and rock, to obtain a supply of water, or of other fluid, as mineral water, brine, petroleum, or natural gas, from a subterranean source, and walled or otherwise protected from caving in. Wells are generally cylindrical, and are sometimes bored to a depth of several hundreds or thousands of feet. (See Artesian well, under Artesian. See also oil-well, tube-well.) From ordinary wells for domestic use the water is raised in vessels—generally buckets hung in pairs to a windlass or singly to a well-sweep—or, as from deeper wells, by pumping.

'Tis not so deep as a well, nor so wide as a church-door; but 'tis enough. Shak., R. and J., iii. 1. 99.

The old oaken bucket, the iron-bound bucket,
The moss-covered bucket which hung in the well.
S. Woodworth, The Old Oaken Bucket.

You were certain, by a sort of fate, to stop, in passing, at the well in the front yard for a drink.
W. M. Baker, New Timothy, p. 51.

5. A cavity, or an inclosed space, shaft, or the like, in some way comparable to or suggestive of an ordinary well, but of some other origin or use: as, an ink-well.

The veriest old well of a shivering best parlour.
Dickens, Christmas Carol, ii.

R. D. Blackmore, Lorna Doone, xliv.

The well . . . must be a square hole, a little larger than the plate [for etching], and about an inch deep.
Workshop Receipts, 1st ser., p. 166.

There must be perfect drainage insured from the bottom of the well [the receptacle for ice in an ice-house], so that the ice will be kept dry.
Workshop Receipts, 1st ser., p. 364.

Specifically—(a) In a building, a compartment or shaft extending through the different floors, or from top to bottom, in which the stairs are placed, or round which they turn; or one in which an elevator or lift moves up and down; or one which serves for the admission of air or light to interior rooms, etc. The kinds of well named are distinctively called a well-staircase or (for the space interior to the stairs) a well-hole, an elevator-shaft, and an air- or light-shaft. (b) In a ship: (1) A compartment formed by bulkheads round the pumps, for their protection and for ease of access to them. (2) A shaft through which to raise and lower an auxiliary screw-propeller. (3) The cockpit. (c) In a fishing-vessel or on a float, a compartment with a perforated bottom for the admission of water, in which fish are kept alive: distinctively called live-well. (d) In a military mine, a shaft with branches or galleries running out from it. (e) In a furnace, the lower part of the cavity into which the metal falls. (f) In an Irish jaunting-car, the hollow space for luggage between the seats. (g) In some breech-loading small arms, a cavity for the breech-block in the rear of the chamber. (h) In an English court of law, the inclosed space for the lawyers and their assistants, immediately in front of the judges' bench.

Solicitors . . . ranged in a line, in a long matted well, . . . between the registrar's red table and the silk gowns.
Dickens, Bleak House, i.

6. In her., a bearing representing a well-curb, usually seen in perspective, circular, and masoned of large stones.—7. A whirlpool; an eddy; especially, a dangerous eddy in the sea, as about the Orkney and Shetland Islands.

The wells of Tuftiloe can wheel the stoutest vessel round and round, in despite of either sail or steerage.
Scott, Pirate, xxxviii.

O to us,
The fools of habit, sweeter seems
To rest beneath the clover sod . . .
Than if with thee [a ship] the roaring wells
Should gulf him fathom-deep in brine.
Tennyson, In Memoriam, x.

Absorbing-well. See absorb.—Artesian well. See Artesian (with cut).—Driven well, or drive-well. See tube-well.—Flowing well. See flowing.—Negative well. Same as absorbing-well.—The Wells, or Wells, in England, wells or springs of mineral waters, or a place where such wells are situated: as, to drink of or go to the wells at Bath; Tunbridge Wells.

The New Wells at Epsom, with variety of Raffling Shops, will be open'd on Easter Monday next.
Quoted in Ashton's Social Life in Reign of Queen Anne, [II. 113.

=Syn. 4. Well, Spring, Fountain, Cistern. A well is an artificial pit sunk to such a depth that water comes into the bottom and rises to the water-level, ready to be drawn up. A spring is a place where water comes naturally to the surface of the ground and flows away: a spring may be opened or struck in excavation, but cannot be made. A fountain is characterized by the leaping upward of the water: it may be natural, and thus be a kind of spring, or it may be artificial, as in a public square. A cistern is an artificial receptacle for the storage of water, as that which is conducted from roofs; figuratively, the word may be applied to similar natural subterranean reservoirs.

Welwitschia (wel-wich′i-ạ), n. [NL. (J. D. Hooker, 1862), for F. Welwitsch (1806–72), an Austrian botanist.] Hooker's name for Tumboa, a genus of gymnospermous plants, of the family Gnetaceæ, among the most remarkable in the vegetable kingdom, distinguished by dicœcious many-flowered imbricated cone-like spikes panicled at the margin of a short woody trunk. The only species, Tumboa Bainesii, is a native of sandy regions of southwestern tropical Africa, in Benguela and Damaraland, between 14° and 23° south latitude.

Tumboa Bainesii.

1. Entire plant. 2. Branch of the panicle. a, stamen—tube laid open, showing the inclosed ovule; b, pollen-grains; c, scale of cone with flower-bud; d, seed, longitudinal section, showing the calyptriform integument at its apex; e, ripe seed and base of pericarp; f, pericarp with styliform apex of the integument of the seed; g, embryo.

Its thick trunk bears but two leaves. The original cotyledons, which are opposite, green, spreading, and persistent, are composed of a hard fibrous substance, and become often 6 feet long and 2 or 3 wide. They finally split into long shreds, but are still retained, it is said, through over a hundred years of growth. The mature trunk forms a tabular mass only about a foot high, but 5 or 6 feet across; the top is truncate, hard, pitted, and broken by cracks, and resembles a fungus of the genus Polyporus; the base is deeply sunk in the soil, and produces middle-sized roots. The panicled inflorescence is composed of rigid erect dichotomously jointed stems from 6 to 12 inches high, with two opposite scales sheathing each joint, and is developed annually from the upper side of the trunk at the base of the cotyledons. The flower-spikes are composed of brilliant scarlet scales overlapping, usually in four rows—the male with spikes 1½ inches long or under, the female larger, fewer, and thicker. Each scale contains a flower, the male a small loose membranous perianth, the filaments connate into a loosely exserted tube, and six anthers, each opening by three apical and finally confluent pores. The fruit is dry, two-winged, compressed, inclosed in a fibrous utricle. The new growth is chiefly horizontal, enlarging the stem both above and below the base of the leaf, which finally projects from a deep marginal cavity.

wely†, a. [ME., < AS. welig, weleg (= OHG. welagi), rich, wealthy, < wela, weal: see *weal*¹.] In a state of weal or good health; healthy.

He was the principal expounder of the so-called Neptunian theory of the earth's formation, according to which the earth was originally covered by a chaotic ocean which held the materials of all the rocks in solution, and from which ocean the various formations were precipitated one after another.

The Wernerian notion of the aqueous precipitation of "Trap" has since that date never held up its head.
G. P. Scrope, Geol. and Extinct Volcanos of Central [France, Pref., p. ix.

II. n. In geol., an advocate of the Wernerian theory.

My two friends agreed with me in the opinion that the error of the Wernerians in undervaluing, or rather despising altogether as of no appreciable value, the influence of volcanic forces in the production of the rocks that compose the surface of the globe formed a fatal bar to the progress of sound geological science which it was above all things desirable to remove.
G. P. Scrope, Geol. and Extinct Volcanos of Central [France, Pref., p. vi.

Neptune had failed to extinguish the torch of Pluto, and the Wernerians were retreating before the Huttonians. Nature, XLII. 218.

OF. wareul, garoul, F. garou (in comp. loup-garou), dial. gairou, varou, etc., ML. gerulphus, garulphus, < Teut.), lit. 'man-wolf' (tr. Gr. λυκάνθρωπος, > ML. lycanthropus, > E. lycanthrope), < wer, man, + wulf, wolf: see wer[1] and wolf.] In old superstition, a human being turned into a wolf while retaining human intelligence. This transformation was either voluntarily assumed, through infernal aid, for the gratification of cannibalism or other beastly propensities, or inflicted by means of witchcraft; and it might be made and unmade at its subject's will in the former case, or be either temporary or permanent in the latter. A voluntary werwolf was the most dangerous of all creatures, and trials of men on charge of crimes committed while in this form took place in Europe as late as the seventeenth century. But an involuntary werwolf might retain humane feelings and sympathies, and act beneficently as the protector of persons in distress or otherwise; and many medieval legends are based upon this idea. The former belief in werwolves throughout Europe (not yet entirely extinct in regions where wolves still abound) has given the general name lycanthropy to belief in the metamorphosis of men into beasts of any kind (generally the most destructive or obnoxious of the locality), prevalent among nearly all savage and semi-civilized peoples.

Sir Marrocke, the good knight that was betrayed by his wife, for shee made him well a seven years a warwolf.
Sir T. Malory, Mort d'Arthur, III. cxxxix.

About the field religiously they went,
With hollowing charms the warwolf thence to fray,
That them and theirs awaited to betray.
Drayton, Man in the Moon.

In the old doctrine of Werewolves, not yet extinct in Europe, men who are versipelles or turnskins have the actual faculty of jumping out of their skins, to become for a time wolves. E. B. Tylor, Prim. Culture, I. 77.

werwolfish, werewolfish (wėr′-, wēr′wůl″fish), a. [< werwolf + -ish[1].] Like a werwolf; lycanthropic; having or exhibiting the appearance or propensities attributed to werwolves.

werwolfism, werewolfism (wėr′-, wēr′wůl″-fizm), n. [< werwolf + -ism.] Lycanthropy; also, the body of tradition and belief on that subject.

English folk-lore is singularly barren of were-wolf stories. . . . The traditional belief in were-wolfism must, however, have remained long in the popular mind, . . . for the word occurs in old ballads and romances.
S. Baring-Gould, Book of Were-Wolves, viii.

westmost (west′mōst), a. superl. [< ME. westmest*, < AS. westmest, westemest, < west + -mest, a double superl. suffix: see -most.] Furthest to the west. [Rare.] Imp. Dict.

Westphal balance. A form of balance used in determining the specific gravity of solutions and also of mineral fragments. In the case of fragments a "heavy solution" is first obtained, in which they just float. The balance consists of a bar supported on a fulcrum near the middle, and having one half of it, from whose extremity hangs a sinker, graduated into ten parts. The sinker is immersed in the liquid under experiment, and then riders are hung at suitable points on the bar until it is brought back into a horizontal position as indicated by the fixed scale at the other end. The position and size of the riders give the means of reading off at once the required specific gravity without calculation.

Westphal-Erb symptom. Same as Westphal's symptom. See symptom.

Westphalian (west-fā′li-an), a. and n. [< Westphalia (see def.) + -an.] I. a. Of or pertaining to Westphalia, a province of Prussia, bordering on Hanover, the Rhenish Province, the Netherlands, etc. Westphalia was formerly a duchy, and (with larger territory) a Napoleonic kingdom from 1807 to 1813.

The Westphalian treaties, which terminated the thirty years' war, were finally signed on Oct. 24, 1648.
Amer. Cyc., XVI. 570.

Westphalian gericht. Same as vehmgericht.

II. n. A native or an inhabitant of Westphalia.

Westphal's foot-phenomenon. A series of rhythmical contractions of the calf-muscles following a sudden pushing up of the toes and ball of the foot, thereby putting the tendo Achillis on the stretch; ankle-clonus.

Westphal's symptom. See symptom.

westre†, v. i. An old form of wester.

Westringia (wes-trin′ji-ä), n. [NL. (Sir J. E. Smith, 1797), named after J. P. Westring, a physician of Linköping, Sweden (died 1833).] A genus of dicotyledonous plants, of the family Menthaceæ, tribe Prostantheræ. It is characterized by a calyx with 5 equal teeth, a corolla with the upper lip flattish, and anther-connectives without appendage. There are about 12 species, all natives of extra-tropical Australia and Tasmania. They are shrubs with small entire leaves in whorls of three or four together, and sessile or short-pedicelled twin flowers scattered in the axils of the leaves, or rarely crowded in leafy terminal heads. W. rosmariniformis, the Victorian rosemary, an evergreen shrub growing about 8 feet high, is sometimes cultivated.

West-Virginian (west-vėr-jin′i-an), a. and n. I. a. Of or pertaining to West Virginia, one of the United States, set apart from Virginia during the civil war, and admitted to the Union in 1863.

II. n. A native or an inhabitant of West Virginia.

westward (west′wärd), adv. [< ME. westward; < AS. westweard, westeweard, westward, < west, west, + -weard, E. -ward.] 1. Toward the west; in a westerly direction: as, to ride or sail westward.

Westward the course of empire takes its way.
Bp. Berkeley, Arts and Learning in America.

2. Toward the ecclesiastical west. See west.

Mass is celebrated by the priest standing behind the altar with his face westward.
E. A. Freeman, Venice, p. 105.

Westward ho! to the west: an old cry of London watermen on the Thames in hailing passengers bound westward, taken as the title of a play by Dekker and Webster and of a novel by Charles Kingsley.

Oli. There lies your way, due west.
Vio. Then westward-ho!
Shak., T. N., iii. 1. 146.

westy[1]†, a. [ME., also westig, < AS. wēstig, desert, < wēste, a desert, waste: see waste[1].] Waste; desert. Layamon, l. 1120.

westy[2] (wes'ti), a. Dizzy; giddy. Ray; Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

Whiles he lies wallowing with a westy head,
And palish carcass, on his brothel bed.
Bp. Hall, Satires, IV. i. 158.

★wet[1] (wet), a. [E. dial. and Sc. also weet and wat; < ME. wet, weet, wat, < AS. wǣt = OFries. wēt, weit = Icel. vātr = Sw. våt = Dan. vaad, wet, moist; akin to AS. wæter, etc., water, and to Goth. wato, etc., water: see water.] 1. Covered with or permeated by a moist or fluid substance; charged with moisture: as, a wet sponge; wet land; wet cheeks; a wet painting (one on which the paint is still semi-fluid).

Ziff the Erthe were made moyst and weet with that Watre, it wolde nevere bere Fruyt.
Mandeville, Travels, p. 100.

I, forced to go to the office on foot, was almost wet to the skin, and spoiled my silk breeches almost.
Pepys, Diary, II. 293.

In the greenest growth of the Maytime,
I rode where the woods were wet.
Swinburne, An Interlude.

2. Filled with or containing a supply of water: as, a wet dock; a wet meter. See phrases below.—3. Consisting of water or other liquid; of a watery nature.

Be your tears wet? Yes, 'faith. I pray, weep not.
Shak., Lear, iv. 7. 71.

4. Characterized by rain; rainy; drizzly; showery: as, wet weather; a wet season (used especially with reference to tropical or semitropical countries, in which the year is divided into wet and dry seasons).

Wet October's torrent flood. Milton, Comus, l. 930.

As to the Seasons of the Year, I cannot distinguish them there [in the torrid zone] no other way than by Wet and Dry. Dampier, Voyages, II. iii. 2.

5. Drenched or drunk with liquor; tipsy. [Colloq.]

When my lost Lover the tall Ship ascends,
With Music gay, and wet with jovial Friends.
Prior, Celia to Damon.

6. In U. S. polit. slang, opposed to prohibition of the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors: as, a wet town. Compare dry, 13.—A wet blanket. See blanket.—A wet boat, a boat that is crank and ships water readily.

"Why don't you go forward, sir? . . . she is sure to wet us abaft." . . . "Thank you, but . . . (with an heroic attempt at sea-slang) I like a wet boat."
C. Reade, Love me Little, xvii.

A wet day. Same as a rainy day (which see, under rainy).

Ergo, saith the miser, "part with nothing, but keep all against a wet day."
Fuller, General Worthies, xi. (Davies.)

Wet bargain. Same as Dutch bargain (which see, under bargain).—Wet bob, a boy who goes in for boating in preference to cricket, foot-ball, or other land-sports. [Eton College slang.]

Everything is enjoyable at Eton in the summer half. The wet-bobs on the river, in all their many trials of strength, . . . and the "dry-bobs" in the playing-fields, with all the excitement of their countless matches.
C. E. Pascoe, Every-day Life in Our Public Schools, p. 62.

Wet brain, a dropsical condition of the brain and its membranes, sometimes observed in post-mortem examinations of those who have died of delirium tremens.—Wet-bulb thermometer. See psychrometer (with cut).—Wet cooper. See cooper.—Wet dock, a dock or basin at a seaport furnished with gates for shutting in the tidal water, so as to float vessels berthed in it at a proper level for loading and unloading.—Wet goods, liquors: so called in humorous allusion to dry goods. [Slang, U. S.]—Wet meter, a gas-meter in which the gas to be measured passes through a body of water. The wet meter regulates the flow of gas more steadily than the dry meter, but is more difficult to keep in order.—Wet plate, in photog., a plate coated with collodion and sensitized with a salt (usually the nitrate) of silver: so called because it is necessary, in this process, to perform all the operations of making the picture, to and including the final fixing of the plate, before the coating of collodion dries. For some thirty years, from about 1850, this was by far the most important photographic process in use, but it is now almost wholly superseded by the various rapid dry-plate processes. The phrase is also used attributively to note the process or anything connected with it. See collodion process, under collodion.—Wet port, a seaport as a place of entry for foreign goods, in distinction from a dry port, or land-port, a place of entry for goods transported by land. Encyc. Brit., VI. 729.—Wet preparation, a specimen of natural history immersed in alcohol or other preservative fluid.—Wet provisions, a class of provisions furnished to a ship, including salt beef and pork, vinegar, molasses, pickles, etc.—Wet puddling. See puddling, 2.—Wet Quaker†, a Quaker who does not strictly observe the rules of his society.

Socinians and Presbyterians,
Quakers, and Wet-Quakers, or Merry-ones.
T. Ward, England's Reformation, I. 213.

Wet Quakerism. See Quakerism.—Wet steam. See steam and open, 13.—Wet way, in chem., the method of qualitative and quantitative analysis and assay in which the substance to be examined is first dissolved in some liquid and then treated with liquid reagents: the opposite of fire-assay, or treatment in the dry way. In the ordinary analysis of minerals, the substance is first finely pulverized and then dissolved in an acid, after which further treatment follows. If insoluble in an acid, it is fused with potassium or sodium carbonate, after which treatment the fused mass is soluble, either wholly or in part, the silica (if the mineral is a silicate) separating out and being removed by filtering, after which the process is continued the same way as when the substance is soluble without the necessity of a preliminary attack by an alkali at a high temperature. Ordinary analyses of minerals are made in the wet way, assays of ores not infrequently in the dry way.—With a wet finger†, with little effort or trouble; very easily or readily: probably from the practice of wetting the finger to facilitate matters, as in turning over a leaf of a book, or rubbing out writing on a slate.

Walk you here; I'll beckon; you shall see I'll fetch her with a wet finger.
Dekker and Webster, Westward Ho, ii. 2.

wet[1] (wet), n. [E. dial. and Sc. also weet and wat; < ME. wet, wete, wæte, wate, < AS. wǣta, m., wǣte, f. (= Icel. Sw. vǣta = Dan. væde), wet, moisture, < wǣt, wet: see wet[1], a.] 1. That which makes wet, as water and other liquids; moisture; specifically, rain.

I se wel how ye swete;
Have heer a cloth and wype awey the wete.
Chaucer, Canon's Yeoman's Tale, l. 176.

Upon whose [a river's] weeping margent she was set;
Like usury, applying wet to wet.
Shak., Lover's Complaint, l. 40.

Aft ha'e I run your errands, lady,
When blawin baith wind and weet.
Lady Maisry (Child's Ballads, II. 83).

The gable-end of the cottage was stained with wet.
T. Hardy, Three Strangers.

2. The act of wetting; specifically, a wetting of the throat with drink; a drink or dram of liquor; indulgence in drinking. [Slang.]

No bargain could be completed without a wet, and no friendship or enmity forgotten without recourse to the bottle. A. C. Grant, Bush-Life in Queensland, I. 30.

3. In U. S. polit. slang, an opponent of prohibition; one who favors the traffic in liquor.—Heavy wet. See heavy[1].

wet[1] (wet), v. t.; pret. and pp. wetted or wet, ppr. wetting. [< ME. weten, wǣten (pret. wette, watte, pp. wet), < AS. wǣtan, wētan, ge-wētan (= Icel. Sw. væta = Dan. væde), wet, moisten, < wǣt, wet: see wet[1], a.] 1. To make wet; moisten, drench, or soak with water or other fluid; dip or soak in a liquid.

Ne wette hir fingres in hir sauce depe.
Chaucer, Gen. Prol. to C. T., l. 129.

2. To moisten with drink; hence, figuratively, to inaugurate or celebrate by a drink or a treat of liquor: as, to wet a new hat. [Slang.]

Down came all the company together, and away! the ale-house was immediately filled with clamour, and scoring one mug to the Marquis of such a place, oil and vinegar to such an Earl, three quarts to my new Lord for wetting his title. Steele, Spectator, No. 88.

Then we should have commissions to wet.
C. Shadwell, Humours of the Navy, ii. 3.

To wet down paper, in printing, to dip paper in water, or sprinkle it in small portions, which are laid together and left under pressure for a time to allow the moisture to spread equally through the mass. The dampness of the paper fits it for imbibing the ink readily and evenly in the process of printing. The printing of illustrations or of delicate type is usually done upon dry and smooth paper, with ink of a suitable quality for such use.—To wet one's line. See line[2].

I have not yet wetted my line since we met together.
I. Walton, Complete Angler, p. 84.

To wet one's whistle. See whistle.—Wetting-out steep. Same as rot's steep (which see, under steep[2]).—Wetting the block, among English shoemakers, the act of celebrating by a convivial supper, on the first Monday in March, the cessation of work by candle-light. Halliwell.

wet[2]†, v. and n. A Middle English form of wit[1].

wet-cup (wet'kup), n. A cupping-glass when used in the operation of wet-cupping. Sometimes it is specially constructed with a lance or scarificator, which can be used to incise the skin after the cup has been applied.

wet-cupping (wet'kup″ing), n. The application of a cupping-glass simultaneously with incision of the skin, by means of which a small quantity of blood is withdrawn. See cupping, 1.

wete†. A Middle English form of wet[1], wit[1].

wether (weᴛʜ'ėr), n. [E. dial. also wedder; < ME. wether, wethir, wedyr, < AS. wither, a wether, a castrated ram, = OS. withar, wither = D. wedder, weder = OHG. widar, MHG. wider, G. widder = Icel. vethr = Sw. vädur = Dan. væder, vædder, a ram, = Goth. withrus, a lamb; akin to L. vitulus, a calf, Skt. vatsa, calf, young, lit. 'a yearling,' connected with Skt. vatsara and Gr. ἔτος, a year, L. vetus, aged, old: see veal and veteran.] A castrated ram.

And softer than the wolle is of a wether.
Chaucer, Miller's Tale, l. 63.

wether-hog (weᴛʜ'ėr-hog), n. A young wether. [Prov. Eng.]

wethewynde†, n. A Middle English form of withwind.

wetly (wet'li), adv. [< wet[1] + -ly[2].] In a wet state or condition; moistly.

"Love," she says, very sweetly, while, for the last time, her blue eyes wetly dwell on his.
Rhoda Broughton, Joan, ii. 11.

wetness (wet'nes), n. The state or condition of being wet; also, the capacity for communicating moisture or making wet: as, the wetness of the atmosphere or of steam.

The wetness of the working fluid [steam] to which the action of the walls of the cylinder gives rise is essentially superficial. Encyc. Brit., XXII. 488.

wet-nurse (wet'nėrs), n. A woman employed to suckle the infant of another. Compare dry-nurse.

wet-nurse (wet'nėrs), v. t. [< wet-nurse, n.] 1. To act as a wet-nurse to; suckle.

Or is he a mythus—ancient word for "humbug"—
Such as Livy told about the wolf that wet-nursed Romulus and Remus? O. W. Holmes, Professor, i.

Hence—2. To coddle as a wet-nurse does; treat with the tenderness shown to an infant.

The system of wetnursing adopted by the Post Office authorities in the case of the telegraph service has not been one of uniform success. Elect. Rev. (Eng.), XXVII. 205.

wet-pack (wet'pak), n. A means of reducing the temperature in fever by wrapping the body in cloths wet with cold water, and covering these with a blanket or other dry material.

wet-press (wet'pres), n. In paper-making, the second press in which wet hand-made paper is compacted and partially dried. E. H. Knight.

wet-salter† (wet'sâl″tėr), n. A salter who prepares or deals in wet provisions. See wet provisions, under wet[1]. Compare dry-salter.

The Parade . . . smelt as strong about Breakfast Times as a Wet Salter's Shop at Midsummer.
Tom Brown, Works (ed. 1708), III. 86.

wet-shod (wet'shod), a. [< ME. wet-shod, wat-shod, wete-shodde; < wet[1] + shod[1].] Wet as regards the shoes; wearing wet shoes.

There [in the battle] men were wetschoede
Alle of Brayn & of blode.
Arthur (ed. Furnivall), l. 469.

Unless to shame his Court Flatterers who would not else be convinc't, Canute needed not to have gone wet-shod home. Milton, Hist. Eng., vi.

So he went over at last, not much aboue wet-shod.
Bunyan, Pilgrim's Progress, ii.

wetter (wet'ėr), n. One who wets, or practises wetting, for some purpose; specifically, in printing, a workman who wets down paper. See phrase under wet[1], v. t.

wetter-off (wet'ėr-ôf'), n. In glass-making, a workman who detaches formed bottles from the blowing-iron by applying a moistened tool to the neck.

wetting-machine (wet'ing-ma-shēn′), n. A mechanism that dampens paper and makes it suitable for printing. It is made in many forms, the simplest of which is a flexible and vibrating rose-nozle attached by a pipe to a water-tank. Paper for web-presses is usually dampened by a spray of water from a perforated pipe as the paper is automatically unwound.

wettish (wet'ish), a. [< wet[1] + -ish[1].] Somewhat wet; moist; humid.

we-uns. See under we.

weve[1]†, v. An old spelling of weave[1].

weve[2]†, v. t. A Middle English form of waive.

weve[3]†, v. See weave[2].

wevil†, n. An obsolete spelling of weevil.

wex†, v. An obsolete form of wax[1].

wey[1] (wā), n. [< ME. weie, waie, weihe, wæge, < AS. wǣg (= OHG. wāga = Icel. vāg), a weight, < wegan, raise, lift: see weigh[1], n., and cf. weight[1].] 1. A unit of weight, 14 stone according to the old statute de ponderibus. But a wey of wool is 6½ tods, or 13 stone; locally, 30, 30½, or 31 pounds. A wey of hemp was 30 pounds in Somersetshire, 32 pounds in Dorsetshire, being 8 heads of 4 pounds, twisted and tied. A statute of 1430 declares that cheese shall not be weighed by the ouncel, but by the wey of 32 cloves, each clove of 7 pounds, except in Essex, where it is 256 pounds, or 32 cloves of 7½ pounds. But locally it was 3 hundredweight, or 416 pounds.

Hence—2. A unit of measure, properly 40 bushels. So a statute of George III. makes a wey of salt one ton, which is 40 bushels. But another statute of the same monarch makes a wey of meal 48 bushels of 84 pounds each; and in Devonshire a wey of lime, coals, or culm was sometimes 48 double Winchester bushels. So in South Wales a wey of coals is 6, not 5, chaldrons.

3. An amount of window-glass—60 cases. [Eng. in all uses.]

wey[2]†, weye†, v. Obsolete spellings of weigh[1].

wey[3]†, n. An obsolete form of way[1].

weyere†, n. An obsolete spelling of weigher.

Weymouth pine. See pine[1].

weyve†, v. An old spelling of waive.

wezand†, n. An obsolete spelling of weasand.

w. f. In printing, an abbreviation of wrong font: a mark on the margin of a proof, calling attention to the fact that the letter or letters, etc., opposite differ from the rest in size or face.

W. G. An abbreviation of Worthy Grand, prefixed to various titles of office among Free-masons and similar orders: as, W. G. C. (Worthy Grand Chaplain or Conductor).

wh-. See W, 1.

wha (hwä), pron. An obsolete or dialectal (Scotch) form of who.

whaap, n. See whaup.

whack (hwak), v. [A var. of thack[2], appar. suggested by whap, whop, whip, etc., the form thwack being intermediate between thack[2] and whack.] I. trans. 1. To give a heavy or resounding blow to; thwack. [Colloq.]

A traveller, coming up, finds the missing man by whacking each of them over the shoulder.
W. A. Clouston, Book of Noodles, ii.

2. To divide into shares; apportion; parcel out. [Slang.]

They then, as they term it, whack the whole lot.
Mayhew, London Labour and London Poor, II. 152.

II. intrans. 1. To strike, or continue striking, anything with smart blows. [Colloq.]—2. To make a division or settlement; square accounts; pay: often in the phrase to whack up. [Slang.]

The city has never whacked up with the gas company.
Elect. Rev. (Amer.), XIII. 9.

At last Long J—— and I got to quarrel about the whacking; there was cheatin' a goin on.
Mayhew, London Labour and London Poor, II. 172.

whack (hwak), n. [< whack, v.] 1. A heavy blow; a thwack.

Sometimes a chap will give me a lick with a stick just as I'm going over; sometimes a reg'lar good hard whack.
Mayhew, London Labour and London Poor, II. 564.

2. A stroke; a trial or attempt: as, to take a whack at a job. [Slang.]—3. A piece; a share; a portion. [Slang.]

This gay young bachelor had taken his share (what he called "his whack") of pleasure.
Thackeray, Shabby Genteel Story, v.

My word! he did more than his whack;
He was never a cove as would shirk.
G. Walch, A Little Tin Plate (A Century of Australian [Song, p. 509).

4. Appetite. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

whacker (hwak'ėr), n. [< whack + -er[1].] Something strikingly large of its kind; a big thing; a whopper. T. Hughes, Tom Brown at Oxford, II. vii. [Slang.]

whacking (hwak'ing), a. [Ppr. of whack, v.; cf. whopping, etc.] Very large; lusty; whopping: as, a whacking fish or falsehood. Often used adverbially: as, a whacking big fish. [Colloq.]

whahoo (hwà-hö′), n. Same as wahoo, but applied specifically to the winged elm.

whaint†, whaintise†. Middle English forms of quaint, quaintise.

whaisle, whaizle (hwā'zl), v. i. [A dial. freq. of wheeze.] To breathe hard, as in asthma; wheeze. [Scotch.]

But sax Scotch miles thou try't their mettle,
An' gart them whaizle.
Burns, Farmer's Salutation to his Auld Mare.

whake, whaker. Dialectal forms of quake, quaker.

whale[1] (hwāl), n. [< ME. hwal, whal, qwal, qual, < AS. hwæl (pl. hwalas) = MD. wal = Icel. hvalr = Sw. Dan. hval, a whale, including any large fish or cetacean; also in comp. D. walvisch = OHG. walfisc, MHG. wal-visch, G. walfisch = Icel. hvalfiskr = Sw. Dan. hvalfisk, a whale (see whale-fish); cf. OHG. walirā, MHG. walre, a whale; cf. also MHG. G. wels, shad. Hence ult. in comp. E. walrus, narwhal, horsewhale; ulterior origin unknown. Skeat connects whale[1], as lit. 'the roller,' with wheel[1]; others connect it with L. balæna, a whale. Both derivations are untenable.] Any member of the mammalian order Cetacea or Cete (which see); an ordinary cetacean, as distinguished from a sirenian, or so-called herbivorous cetacean; a marine mammal of fish-like form and habit, with fore limbs in the form of fin-like flippers, without external trace of hind limbs, and with a naked body tapering to a tail with flukes which are like a fish's caudal fin, but are horizontal instead of vertical; especially, a cetacean of large to the largest size, the small ones being distinctively named dolphins, porpoises, etc.: in popular use applied to any large marine animal. (a) Whale is not less strictly applicable than universally applied to the toothless or whalebone whales, all of which are of great size, and some of which are by far the largest of animals. They consist of the right whales, finner-whales, and humpbacks, composing the family Balænidæ alone, and represent five well-marked genera, namely: (1) Balæna proper, the right whales, without any dorsal fin and with smooth throat; (2) Neobalæna, based on N. marginata, a whalebone whale said to combine a smooth throat with presence of a dorsal fin; (3) Rachianectes, with one species, R. glaucus, the gray whale; (4) Megaptera, the humpbacked whales, with a dorsal fin, furrowed throat, and long flippers, of several nominal species of all seas; and (5) Balænoptera, the true finners, or rorquals, with dorsal fin, furrowed throat, and short flippers: it comprises at least four, and probably more, species. Various other genera have been named (as Agaphelus for certain so-called scragwhales), and the generic synonyms of these whales are probably more numerous than the actual species. (b)

Skeleton of Southern Right Whale.

Whale is extended, nearly always with a qualifying word, to most of the odontocete or toothed cetaceans, and especially to those of great size, as the sperm-whale, but also to some of the smallest, no larger than a dolphin, as the pygmy or porpoise sperm-whales of the genus Kogia, and to various forms of intermediate sizes, as the pilot-whales (Globicephalus), the bottle-nosed or bottle-headed whales (Hyperoödon), the white whales (Delphinapterus), etc. Some of these whales also have distinctive names into which whale does not enter, as blackfish, beluga, bottlehead, bottlenose, grampus, killer, etc., or they share the qualified names porpoise and dolphin with various small cetaceans more properly so called. The genera and species of the toothed whales are much more numerous than those of the baleen whales; their synonymy is very extensive and intricate, and is in some cases in a state of confusion which can only be cleared up by future research. (c) In geologic time whales date back to the Eocene; and a suborder Archæoceti (contrasted with Odontoceti and Mystacoceti) has been named to cover certain forms still only imperfectly known from fragmentary remains. The oldest whales like any of the living forms date from the late Eocene, and are toothed whales related to the humpbacks. (See Zeuglodon.) Whalebone whales are not known to be older than the Pliocene. (d) In present geographical distribution whales are found in all seas, and some of them enter rivers. Most of the species are individually wide-ranging on the high seas, and attempts which have been made to discriminate similar forms from different waters have in most cases proved futile. Several of the larger forms have been the objects of systematic fisheries for centuries. (See whale-fishery.) The principal products are oil, both train and sperm, baleen or whalebone, spermaceti, and ambergris; the hide of some of the smaller whales affords a leather. Whales are exclusively carnivorous, and feed for the most part upon a great variety of small animals which float on the surface of the sea, generally known collectively as brit or whale-brit. This includes various cephalopods, as squids and cuttles, with other mollusks of different orders, as well as several different kinds of crustaceans. Brit of some kinds covers the ocean in immense areas, to which the whales resort as feeding-grounds. Some whales attack large animals, even of their own kind (see killer, Orca[1]), but nearly all are timid and inoffensive, seeking only to avoid their enemies, though capable of formidable resistance to attack. Whales bring forth their young alive, like all mammals above the monotremes, and suckle them; the teats are a pair, beside the vulva. They breathe only air, for which purpose they must regularly seek the surface, though capable of remaining long under water without respiring. The spouting of the whale is the act of expiration, during which the air in the lungs, loaded with watery vapor, is forcibly expelled like spray in a single stream, or in two streams, according as the blowholes are single or there are a pair of these spiracles. Some sea-water may be mixed with the breath, if the whale spouts beneath the surface, but the visible stream is chiefly condensed vapor, like that of human breath on a cold day. Whales have a naked skin, saving a few bristles about the mouth, chiefly in the young; the hide is often incrusted with barnacles, or infested with other crustacean parasites. The bodily temperature is maintained in the coldest surroundings by the heavy layer of blubber which lies under the skin of the whole body, and in the sperm-whale forms a special deposit on the skull, giving its singular shape to the head. The general form of the body is like that of a fish, in adaptation to entirely aquatic habits and means of locomotion. It tapers behind the body-cavity in a solid muscular part, the small, and ends in broad, short flukes lying horizontally and extending from side to side. This tail-fin is the principal organ of locomotion, like the vertical caudal fin of a fish. The fore limbs form flippers of varying length in different species. These fins are of medium length in the right whale, short in the sperm and rorqual, and extremely long in the humpback. In all cases the pectoral fin has a skeleton composed of the same joints or segments as the fore limb of ordinary mammals, and of all the usual bones except a clavicle; but the digital phalanges are more numerous. The dorsal fin, when present, is a mere excrescence, without any bony basis. There is never any outward sign of hind limbs, but the skeleton of some whales includes certain vestigial bones of a proximal segment of the pelvic limb, entirely separate from the spinal column, and apparently only serving in the male as a suspensorium for the penis. There is consequently no sacrum, nor any break in the series of vertebræ from the hindmost that bears ribs to the end of the spinal column. The cervical vertebræ offer exceptional conditions. (See cut under ankylosis.) The dentition of whales is sufficiently diverse to furnish characters of the main divisions of cetaceans. The entire toothlessness of the baleen whales is matched by few mammals (see Edentata); the presence of teeth in the lower jaw only, as in various odontocete whales, is peculiar; the dentition of the narwhal is wholly exceptional. Teeth, when present, are always homodont (like one another) and monophyodont (there being no milk-teeth). The soft palate and the larynx are specialized in adaptation to the act of spouting. The digestive organs are comparatively simple; the uterus is bicornous, the placenta diffuse and non-deciduate; the testes are abdominal; and there is no os penis nor seminal vesicle. The circulatory system is notable for its plexuses, both arterial and venous. Notwithstanding the outward resemblance to a fish, whales belong to the higher (educabilian) series of mammals, having a relatively large brain. One of the most remarkable of the many anomalies presented by this highly specialized order of mammals is the difference in size of its members, the range being far greater than that of any other ordinal group—from 4 to about 80 feet in linear dimension. The size of the larger whales has been grossly exaggerated in many of the accounts which find popular credence. Adult right whales of different species range from 20 to 50 feet in length, only the polar whale attaining the latter dimension; the common humpback is from 40 to 50 feet long; the sperm-whale reaches 60 feet; and the rorquals of several species range from 40 to 80 feet, the maximum length being reached only by the blue rorqual, which is the largest of known animals.—Arctic whale, the polar whale, Balæna mysticetus; that right whale which is of circumpolar distribution, as distinguished from any such whale of temperate North Atlantic or North Pacific waters, or from which the latter are sought to be distinguished, as the Atlantic, Pacific, northwest, or Biscay whale.—Atlantic whale, the right whale of temperate North Atlantic waters, Balæna glacialis. Also named Balæna australis, B. cisarctica, and B. biscayensis, the Biscay whale.—Australian whale, the New Zealand whale.—Baleen whale, any whalebone whale, as a right whale. See Mysticete, Megapterinæ, Balænidæ.—New Zealand whale, Neobalæna marginata, a whalebone whale of Polynesian and Australian waters, not yet well known, having the smooth throat of the right whales, a dorsal fin, very long and slender white baleen, small flippers with only four digits, and various osteological peculiarities. It is of smallest size among the baleen whales, being only about 20 feet long.—Northwest whale, the right whale of the northwestern coast of North America, Balæna sieboldi, as distinguished from the southern right whale. Also called Pacific right whale.—Pilot-whale. Same as caaing-whale.—Polar whale, the right whale of the arctic Atlantic waters, or Greenland whale, Balæna mysticetus, more fully called great polar whale, and by many local names, as bow-head, steepletop, ice-breaker, ice-whale, etc.—Pygmy sperm-whale, a toothed whale of the genus Kogia; a porpoise sperm-whale (which see, under sperm-whale).—Right whale, a whalebone whale of the restricted genus Balæna: so called, it is said, because this is the "right" kind of whale to take. Right whales inhabit all known seas, and those of the main divisions of the waters of the globe have been specified by name, as the arctic, polar, or Greenland right whale, the Atlantic, the Pacific, the southern, the northwest, etc. These have received several technical names, as B. mysticetus of the Arctic ocean, B. biscayensis or cisarctica of the North Atlantic, B. australis of the South Atlantic, B. japonica of the North Pacific, B. antipodarum of the South Pacific, and others. It is not likely that more than two valid species are represented in this synonymy: (a) B. mysticetus is of circumpolar distribution in the northern hemisphere. It attains a length of from 40 to 50 feet, has no dorsal fin, flippers of medium size, and very long narrow flukes, tapering to a point and somewhat falcate. The greatest girth is about the middle, whence the body tapers rapidly to the comparatively slender root of the tail. The throat is smooth; the head is of great size; and the eye is situated very low down and far back, between the base of the flipper and the corner of the mouth. The profile of the mouth is strongly arched, and its capacity is enormous, exceeding that of the thorax and abdomen together. This cavern is fringed on each side with baleen hanging from the upper jaw; the plates are 350 to 400 on each side, the longest attaining a length of 10 or 12 feet; they are black in color, and finely frayed out along the inner edge into a fringe of long elastic filaments. When the jaws are closed, the baleen serves as a sieve to strain out the multitudes of small mollusks or crustaceans upon which the whale feeds, and which are gulped in with many barrels of water in the act of grazing the surface with open mouth. About 300 of the slabs on each side are merchantable, representing 15 hundredweight of bone from a whale of average size, which yields also 15 tons of oil; but some large individuals render nearly twice as much of both these products. (b) The southern right whale, B. glacialis, differs from the polar whale in its proportionately shorter and smaller head, greater convexity of the arch of the mouth, shorter baleen, and more numerous vertebræ. It inhabits both Atlantic and Pacific Oceans in temperate latitudes, and in the former waters was the object of a fishery during the middle ages for the European supply of oil and bone. This industry gave way to the pursuit of the polar whale about the beginning of the seventeenth century. This whale has long been rare in the North Atlantic, but has occasionally stranded on the European coast, and more frequently on that of the United States. A similar if not identical right whale is hunted in temperate North Pacific waters. Right whales are rare and not pursued in tropical seas, but are objects of the chase in various parts of the south temperate ocean. > Ham. Methinks it [a cloud] is like a weasel.

> Pol. It is backed like a weasel.
> Ham. Or like a whale?
> Pol. Very like a whale. Shak., Hamlet, iii. 2. 399.

Whalebone whale, a baleen whale; a toothless whale whose mouth contains whalebone; any member of the Balænidæ, as a right whale, humpback, or rorqual, whether furrowed or smooth.—Whale of passage, a migratory whale, or a whale during its migration.—Whale's bone†, ivory: perhaps because supposed to come from the bones of the whale, at a time when the real source of the material was little known, or when most of the ivory used in western Europe consisted of the teeth of the walrus, confounded with the whale, and possibly those of the sperm-whale, which, though of comparatively small size, are of fine quality. The term was in common use for several centuries.

★whaleback (hwāl′bak), n. 1. Same as turtleback.—2. A vessel of which the upper deck is rounded: generally without upper works. Such vessels were first used on the great lakes.

whale-barnacle (hwāl′bär″na-kl), n. A cirriped of the family Coronulidæ, parasitic upon whales, as Coronula diadema. See cut under Coronula.

whale-bird (hwāl′bėrd), n. 1. One of the blue petrels of the genus Prion, several species of which inhabit the southern ocean. P. vittatus, one of the best-known, is notable for the expanse of its beak, the edges of which are beset with tooth-like processes. The name extends to several other oceanic birds which whale-boat (hwāl′bōt), n. A long narrow boat, sharp at both ends, and fitted for steering with an oar as well as with a rudder, used in the pursuit of whales, and, from its handy and seaworthy qualities, also for many other purposes. It is usually from 20 to 30 feet long. A pair of these boats is commonly carried by ocean passenger-steamers, in addition to their heavier boats.

2. The turnstone, Strepsilas interpres. Hearne. [Hudson's Bay.]—3. The red or gray phalarope. Kumlein. [Labrador.]

whalebone (hwāl′bōn), n. and a. [< ME. whale bone, qwale-bon; < whale[1] + bone[1].] I. n. 1. The elastic horny substance which grows in place of teeth in the upper jaw of whales of the family Balænidæ (hence called whalebone or bone whales), forming a series of thin parallel plates from a few inches to several feet long; baleen (which see). The term is misleading, for the substance is in no sense bone, but a kind of horn; and its trade-name whale-fin is equally inaccurate, for it has nothing to do with the fins of the whale. Whalebone grows in several hundred close-set parallel plates along each side of the upper jaw of the baleen whale, and thus in the situation occupied by the teeth of ordinary mammals; it is entirely shut in by the lips when the mouth is closed. Each one of the plates of both rows then bends with a strong sweep backward, and when the mouth is opened straightens out, so that there is always a heavy fringe on each side of the cavity of the mouth, forming an impassable barrier to the multitudinous small creatures which the whale scoops in from the surface of the sea. The longest baleen plates are those of the polar whale, some of which may exceed 12 feet in length. The plates in different species differ in color from a dull grayish-black through various streaked or veined colorations to somewhat creamy white. Whalebone stands quite alone among animal substances in a particular combination of lightness, toughness, flexibility, elasticity, and durability, together with such a cleavage (due to the straightness of its parallel fibers) that it may be split for its whole length to any desired thinness of strips. A sulphur-bottom whale has yielded 800 pounds of baleen, of which the longest plates were 4 feet in length. In the California gray whale the longest bone is from 14 to 16 inches, of a light or whitish color, coarse-grained, and heavily and unevenly fringed. The baleen of a finback varies according to its position, attaining a length of 2 feet 4 inches and a width of from 12 to 14 inches, with a fine fringe from 2 to 4 inches long; it is somewhat ridged crosswise. That of the sharp-headed finner is entirely white, with a short thin fringe; it has been found to consist of 270 pairs of plates, the longest being 10 inches in length. Whalebone is or has been used in the manufacture of a great variety of articles.

Four plates of baleen, seen obliquely from within.

2. Something made of whalebone or baleen; a piece of whalebone prepared for some regular use: as, the whalebones of a corset.—3. Specifically, a whalebone riding-whip.

Lith. kwetys, Lett. kweeschi, wheat (prob. < Teut.); lit. 'that which is white' (with ref. to the color of the grain or the meal), < AS. hwit, etc., white: see white[1].] A cereal grain, the product of species of Triticum, chiefly of T. æstivum. The origin of the plant is not clearly known, and the wide-spread impression of its having been derived from a grass, Ægilops ovata, of the Mediterranean region, is without proper foundation. The wheat-plant is a grass closely related to barley and rye, having a dense four-sided spike, and grains longitudinally furrowed on one side, turgid on the other. In some varieties the palets bear awns, in others not, the varieties being respectively called bearded and beardless or bald. Some are planted in the spring—spring or summer wheat—others in the fall, maturing the next season—winter wheat. The product of the latter was formerly preferred, but with recent methods of manufacture spring

Wheat (Triticum æstivum).
1, the complete plant of T. æstivum; 2, the spike of the same; 3, the spike of a beardless form of T. æstivum; 4, a grain germinating. a, part of the rachis; b, the floret of T. æstivum; c, the flower, showing two lodicules, the stamens, and the stigmas.

wheat is equally valued. The varieties are further classified as white and red or amber, referring to the color of the grain; among winter wheats, at least, the white are more esteemed. The grain is highly nutritious, containing some 67 per cent. of carbohydrates, 13 per cent. of albuminoids, together with small quantities of the mineral substances, potash, soda, etc., required by the animal system, with only 14 per cent. of water. For use it is chiefly converted into flour; the finest but not the most nutritious flour is nearest pure starch. The richer elements lie nearest the skin, and these are secured in "Graham" flour, which properly includes the whole grain, and by recent milling processes which appropriate all but the cuticle. Wheat was formerly made in England into a dish called frumenty or furmenty, by boiling it entire in milk, and seasoning. It is now largely used in America in the form of cracked, crushed, or rolled wheat, or wheat-grits. Wheat has been known from antiquity, being mentioned in Scripture; it is traceable to ancient Egypt, and is recorded as introduced into China about 2700 B. C. It now furnishes the principal breadstuff among all civilized nations. It is adaptable to various conditions and widely grown in temperate regions; it is not excluded by cold winters, but requires a mean summer temperature of not less than 57°. Among the principal countries which produce a surplus are the United States, Canada, Russia, Hungary, India, Australia, Egypt, Rumania, and Turkey. The varieties are very numerous, and there are several more or less strongly marked races, one of which is spelt.

Also called grass-worm and fall army-worm. See Laphygma. C. V. Riley.—Wheat-dampening machine, a machine for washing grain to free it from smut and dirt, and afterward drying it. E. H. Knight.—Wheat eel-worm, a nematode worm of the family Anguillulidæ, Tylenchus tritici, which causes the disease known as ear-cockle, purples, or false ergot in wheat in Europe. It produces round dark-colored distorted growths in the ear of wheat. Also called wheat-worm.—Wheat gall-fly, the adult of the wheat joint-worm. See Isosoma, 1, joint-worm, 2, and cut under wheat-fly.—Wheat-head army-worm, the larva of an American noctuid moth, Heliophila albilinea. See Leucania.—Wheat plant-louse, one of several aphids, or Aphididæ, which infest wheat, as Necterophora avenæ and Toxoptera graminium.—Wheat straw-worm, the wheat joint-worm. See joint-worm, 2.—Wheat whisky. See whisky[2].—Wheat-wireworm. See wireworm.—White wheat. See def.—Winter wheat. See def. (See also mummy-wheat, not-wheat.)

Wheat Bulb-worm (Meromyza americana).
a, wheat-stalk, showing larva at work; b, larva; c, pupa. (Lines show natural sizes.)

wheat-bird (hwēt′bėrd), n. The chaffinch or wheatsel-bird. [Local, British.]

wheat-brush (hwēt′brush), n. In milling, a grain-scouring machine. It consists essentially of two brushes in the form of disks placed close together in a hopper, one brush remaining stationary, and the other revolving rapidly as the grain is delivered between them. The grain is carried to the periphery of the brushes by centrifugal force, and falls into a chamber beneath, whence the dust is removed by a suction-blast. E. H. Knight.

wheat-bug (hwēt′bug), n. Either one of two bugs, Miris tritici and M. dolabratus, found commonly on wheat in England. Curtis, Farm Insects.

wheat-caterpillar (hwēt′kat″ėr-pil-ăr), n. A small caterpillar which eats the kernels of wheat in the field: supposed to be Hypsopygia costalis.

wheat-chafer (hwēt′chā″fėr), n. A beetle, Anisoplia austriaca, which does great damage to European wheat-fields, particularly those of Russia.

wheat-cracker (hwēt′krak″ėr), n. A mill for cracking wheat to make grits.

wheat-drill (hwēt′dril), n. See drill[1], n., 3.

wheat-duck (hwēt′duk), n. The American widgeon, Mareca americana, found in large flocks in wheat-fields. G. Trumbull, 1888. [Oregon.]

wheat-ear (hwēt′ēr), n. [< wheat + ear[2].] An ear of wheat.

Gold flashed out from the wheat-ear brown,
And flame from the poppy's leaf. Eliza Cook.

Wheat-ear stitch, in embroidery, a fancy stitch; a variety of chain-stitch by which is produced a pattern somewhat resembling an ear of grain with stiff beard.

wheatear (hwēt′ēr), n. [A corruption, simulating wheat + ear[2] (also used in the form white-ear, with the first element unaltered), of white-arse, or rather of its earlier form whiterse* (taken as a plural, whence the supposed singular wheat-ear): so called from its white rump, < white[1] + arse. The name is equiv. to whitetail, formerly whittail, and the F. name cul blanc.] A chat of the genus Saxicola, Saxicola œnanthe, the stonechat, fallow-finch, or whitetail, an oscine passerine bird abundant in Europe, Asia, and Africa, and found sparingly in North America. The wheatear is 6¾ inches long, and 12½ in extent; it varies much in plumage with sex, age, and season. The adult male in summer has the upper parts French gray, with conspicuous white rump and white base of the black tail; the under parts are some shade of buff, often whitish;

the wings are blackish; a broad glossy-black bar on the side of the head includes the ears, and is surmounted by a white stripe; the bill and feet are black, the eyes dark-brown. The female is brownish, darkest on the upper parts, with wings and tail like those of the male; the young resemble the female, but are spotty. The nest is made on the ground; the eggs are four to seven, greenish-blue, usually spotless, sometimes faintly speckled. The wheatear shares with both the British species of Pratincola the name stonechat, which is more appropriate to this bird than to either of the bushchats; it is more fully specified as white-rumped stonechat, and also called white-rump, whitetail, stone-clatter (from its Gaelic name clacharan, which survives in Scotland and in books), fallow-finch, and by other local names.

What cook of any spirit would lose her time in picking larks, wheat-ears, and other small birds?
Swift, Directions to Servants (Cook).

Although the wheatear's colors are somewhat chaste, still their bold contrast, and the manner in which they are distributed, make the bird a very pretty one.
Seebohm, Hist. Brit. Birds, I. 302.

wheat-eel (hwēt'ēl), n. [Appar. < wheat + eel, but perhaps a dial. form of wheat-evil*, < wheat + evil[1].] Ear-cockle or purples, a disease of wheat caused by the eel-worm, Tylenchus tritici.

wheaten (hwē'tn), a. [< ME. whcten, hueten, hwæten, < AS. hwǣten (= MD. weiten, D. weite-(meel) = G. weizen(brod)), < hwǣte, wheat, + -en, E. -en[2].] Of, pertaining to, or made from wheat: as, wheaten straw. Specifically—(a) Made of the stalks, straw, or husks of wheat.

There wayted Summer naked starke, all saue a wheaten hat. Golding, tr. of Ovid's Metamorph., ii.

Peace should still her wheaten garland wear.
Shak., Hamlet, v. 2. 41.

(b) Made of the grain or flour of wheat.

More hi uynt smak [she finds more relish] in ane zoure epple thanne in ane huetene lhoue [loaf].
Ayenbite of Inwyt (E. E. T. S.), p. 82.

Of wheaten flour shalt thou make them [cakes and wafers]. Ex. xxix. 2.

His diet was of wheaten bread.
Cowper, Epitaph on a Hare.

wheat-field (hwēt'fēld), n. A field of wheat.

wheat-fly (hwēt'flī), n. 1. Any one of several flies of the family Oscinidæ, common upon wheat in Europe and North America, as Oscinis frit, Chlorops tæniopus, and C. lineata.—2. The Hessian fly.—3. The wheat-midge.—4. Improperly, a wheat plant-louse in the winged form. Compare greenfly, 2.—5. The wheat gall-a, wheat-stalks with galls produced by the larva; b, female fly (cross shows natural size).

fly, a chalcidid, Isosoma tritici, whose larva is the wheat joint-worm. See joint-worm, 2.

wheat-grader (hwēt'grā″dėr), n. In milling, a machine for cleaning, separating, and grading wheat according to the size and shape of the grains; a grain- or wheat-separator. E. H. Knight.

wheat-grass (hwēt'gras), n. The couch- or quitch-grass, Agropyron repens; also, any wild grass of the genus Agropyron or Triticum.

wheatland (hwēt'land), n. Land sown with wheat.

Beyond the wheatlands in the northern pines.
A. Lampman, The Academy, Nov. 23, 1889, p. 335.

wheat-maggot (hwēt'mag″ot), n. The larva of any one of the dipterous insects affecting the wheat-plant.

wheat-midge (hwēt'mij), n. 1. A dipterous insect of the family Cecidomyiidæ, Diplosis tritici, which lays its eggs in the flowers of wheat-heads, and whose minute reddish larvæ devour the kernels. It is originally a European insect, but has been imported into the United States and Canada. The larva is known in England as the red maggot.

2. A dipterous insect, Lasioptera obfuscata. Encyc. Dict.

wheat-mildew (hwēt'mil″dū), n. A name applied in England to the common rust (Puccinia graminis), found on various grasses, and especially on wheat and oats. In the United States it is applied to Erysiphe graminis, a true powdery mildew.

wheat-mite (hwēt'mīt), n. Same as flour-mite.

wheat-moth (hwēt'môth), n. One of several small moths whose larvæ devour stored wheat, as the Angoumois grain-moth (Sitotroga cerealella), the Indian-meal moth (Plodia interpunctella), the Mediterranean flour-moth (Ephestia kühniella), or the wolf-moth (Tinea granella).

wheat-pest (hwēt'pest), n. A dipterous insect, the frit-fly, Oscinis vastator.

wheat-riddle (hwēt'rid″l), n. A grain- or wheat-separator.

wheat-rust (hwēt'rust), n. Same as red rust and black rust (see both, under rust).

wheat-scourer (hwēt'skour″ėr), n. In milling, a cleaning-machine which receives the grain as passed from the smutter, and removes any hairs or loose parts of the outer bran. Scouring, cleaning from smut or fungus, and polishing are now all performed in one machine called a smutter, scourer, and separator. See smut-mill.

wheatsel-bird (hwēt'sl-bėrd), n. The chaffinch, Fringilla cœlebs: so called from its congregating in autumn about the time of sowing wheat. J. H. Gurney. See cut under chaffinch. [Norfolk, Eng.]

wheat-separator (hwēt'sep″a-rā-tor), n. An apparatus for freeing wheat from mustard-seed, cockle, grass-seed, etc. The grain is made to pass over a series of inclined plates pierced with holes which allow the passage of the smaller seeds but retain the wheat. E. H. Knight.

Wheatstone bridge. See resistance, 3.

wheat-thief (hwēt'thēf), n. The corn gromwell or bastard alkanet, Lithospermum arvense, a grain-field weed of Europe and parts of Asia, introduced in North America.

wheat-thrips (hwēt'thrips), n. Any one of several species of thrips found abundantly upon wheat, and commonly supposed to injure the wheatlands, as Thrips cerealium of Europe, and Limothrips tritici and L. graminеæ of the United States.

wheat-weevil (hwēt'wē″vl), n. 1. The grain-weevil.—2. The rice-weevil. See also Calandra, 2, and weevil.

wheat-worm (hwēt'wėrm), n. Same as wheat eel-worm (which see, under wheat).

wheaze†, v. i. An old spelling of wheeze.

whedere†, pron. An old spelling of whether[1].

wheedle (hwē'dl), v.; pret. and pp. wheedled, ppr. wheedling. [Formerly wheadle; perhaps for weedle*, < G. wedeln, wag the tail, fan (hence fawn, flatter?), < wedel, a fan, tail, brush, MHG. wedel (wadel), OHG. wedil (wadal), fan, winnowing-fan, lit. instrument for blowing; with formative -del (-thlo-), < OHG. wehan, MHG. G. wehen, blow: see wind[2]. Similar uses occur with Dan. logre, wag the tail, also fawn upon one; with Icel. flathra, wag the tail, fawn upon; with OF. coueter, wag the tail, etc. It is not clear how a G. word of this kind could get into E.; but the German wars of the 17th century brought in a number of words, and this may have been taken up as a slang term. Some refer wheedle to W. chwedlai, talk, gossip, < chwedl, a fable, story, discourse; but the resemblance is superficial.] I. trans. 1. To entice, especially by soft words; gain over by coaxing and flattery; cajole; coax; flatter; hence, to hoax; take in.

I admire thy Impudence, I cou'd never Have had the Face to have wheadl'd the poor Knight so.
Etherege, She Would if She Could, i. 1.

And so go to her, begin thy new employment; wheedle her, jest with her, and be better acquainted one with another. Wycherley, Country Wife, ii. 1.

I am not the first that he has wheadled with his dissembling Tongue. Congreve, Way of the World, v. 1.

It is (probably) the best Conduct not to bear away Quartering, till you have wheedled the Enemy into your Wake.
W. Mountaine, Seaman's Vade-Mecum (ed. 1761), p. 120.

2. To gain or procure by flattery or coaxing.

I have . . . a deed of settlement of the best part of her estate, which I wheedled out of her.
Congreve, Way of the World, iii.

II. intrans. To flatter; coax.

His business was to pump and wheedle.
S. Butler, Hudibras, II. iii. 335.

If that wheadling Villain has wrought upon Foible to detect me, I'm ruin'd. Congreve, Way of the World, iii. 4.

In a fawning, wheedling tone. C. Kingsley, Hypatia, iv.

wheedle† (hwē'dl), n. [< wheedle, v.] 1. One who wheedles; a cajoling or coaxing person.

Hip. Methinks you might believe me without an oath. You saw I could dissemble with my father, why should you think I could not with you?
Ger. So young a wheedle!
Wycherley, Gentleman Dancing-Master, iv. 1.

2. A piece of cajolery; a flattering or coaxing speech; a hoax.

Why, hast thou lost all Sense of Modesty?
Do'st thou think to pass these gross wheadles on me too?
Etherege, She Would if She Could, i. 1.

wheedler (hwēd'lėr), n. [< wheedle + -er[1].] One who wheedles.

wheedlesome (hwē'dl-sum), a. [< wheedle + -some.] Coaxing; cajoling. [Rare.]

Anything more irresistibly wheedlesome I never saw.
L. M. Alcott, Hospital Sketches, etc., p. 88.

wheedling (hwēd'ling), n. [Verbal n. of wheedle, v.] The act or art of coaxing, cajoling, or deluding by flattery.

He wrote severall pieces, viz. "The English Rogue," "The Art of Wheadling," &c. Aubrey, Lives (Meriton).

★wheel[1] (hwēl), n. [< ME. wheel, whele, whel, wheol, qwel, hwel, huegel, hweol, < AS. hweól, hwiól, contr. of hweowol, hweohl (= MD. weel, wiel, D. wiel = LG. weel, wel = Icel. hjól = OSw. hiugl, Sw. hjul = Dan. hjul, a wheel); Teut. appar. hwehula*, hwehula*, perhaps = Gr. κύκλος, a wheel, circle: see cycle[1]. The Icel. hvel, orb, disk, can hardly be related.] 1. A circular frame or solid disk turning on an axis. Wheels, as applied to vehicles, usually consist of a nave, into which are inserted spokes or radii, connecting it with the periphery or circular ring. (See car-wheel (with cut); also cuts under car-track and felly.) Wheels are most important agents in machinery, being employed in a variety of forms and combinations for a great variety of purposes, as for transmitting motion, regulating velocity, converting one species of motion into another, reducing friction, equalizing the effect of forces applied in an intermittent or irregular manner, etc.

The cartere over-ryden with his carte,
Under the whel ful lowe he lay adoun.
Chaucer, Knight's Tale (ed. Morris), l. 1165.

Smack went the whip, round went the wheels,
Were never folks so glad;
The stones did rattle underneath,
As if Cheapside were mad. Cowper, John Gilpin.

2. Any instrument, apparatus, machine, or other object shaped like a wheel, or the essential feature of which is a wheel: as, a mill-wheel, a spinning-wheel, or a potters' wheel.

Then I went down to the potter's house, and, behold, he wrought a work on the wheels. Jer. xviii. 3.

Thus, in lower life, whilst the wheel, the needle, &c., imploy her, the plough of some trade perhaps demands the muscles and hardiness of him.
W. Wollaston, Religion of Nature, viii. 1.

Turn, turn, my wheel! This earthen jar
A touch can make, a touch can mar.
Longfellow, Keramos.

The meal-sacks on the whiten'd floor,
The dark round of the dripping wheel.
Tennyson, Miller's Daughter.

(a) Naut., a circular frame with handles projecting from the periphery, and an axle on which are wound the ropes or chains which connect with the rudder for steering a ship; a steering-wheel. Where a ship is steered by steam, in place of an ordinary wheel a small wheel is used, by turning which steam is admitted to the engines which turn the barrel on which the wheel-rope is wound. (b) An instrument of torture. See to break on the wheel, under break.

The lifted axe, the agonizing wheel,
Luke's iron crown, and Damien's bed of steel.
Goldsmith, Traveller, l. 435.

(c) A firework of a circular shape which revolves on an axis, while burning by the reaction of the escaping gases. See catharine-wheel, 3, and pinwheel, 3. (d) pl. Figuratively, a carriage; a chariot. [Poetical.]

How now, noble Pompey! What, at the wheels of Cæsar? art thou led in triumph? Shak., M. for M., iii. 2. 47.

I earth in earth forget these empty courts,
And thee returning on thy silver wheels.
Tennyson, Tithonus.

(e) One of the attributes of Fortune, the emblem of mutability.

Huanne the lheuedi of hap [lady of fortune] heth hire huegel y-went [turned] to the manne.
Ayenbite of Inwyt (E. E. T. S.), p. 24.

Now y am vndre Fortunes whele,
My frendis forsaken me Euerychoon.
Hymns to Virgin, etc. (E. E. T. S.), p. 73.

The next turn of the wheel gave the victory to Edward IV. J. Gairdner, Richard III., i.

(f) A bicycle or a tricycle. [Colloq.]

A plucky long man with a fifty-six inch wheel, who crowned his effort with the difficult performance of bringing his machine to a stand-still before dismounting, and holding it so for several minutes. The Century, XIX. 494.

(g) In zoöl.: (1) The characteristic organ of a wheel-animalcule; the trochal disk of a rotifer; a wheel-organ (which see). See cuts under Rotifer, Rotifera, and trochal. (2) Some discoid or wheel-shaped calcareous or siliceous concretion, as of an echinoderm or a sponge; a wheel-spicule.

3. A circular course or motion; a whirling round; a revolution; rotation; also, a wheeling, turning, or bending.

The leed, withouten faile,
Is, lo, the metal of Saturne,
That hath a ful large wheel to turne.
Chaucer, House of Fame, l. 1450.

Satan, bowing low, . . .
Throws his steep flight in many an aery wheel.
Milton, P. L., iii. 741.

4. A motive power; in the plural, machinery; hence, a principle of life or motion.

The wheels of weary life at last stood still.
Dryden and Lee, Œdipus, iv. 1.

That power who bids the ocean ebb and flow, . . .
Builds life on death, on change duration founds,
And gives the eternal wheels to know their rounds.
Pope, Moral Essays, iii. 168.

When . . . the heart is sick,
And all the wheels of Being slow.
Tennyson, In Memoriam, l.

5†. The burden of a song; a refrain: perhaps in allusion to its regular recurrence. Steevens.

Oph. [Sings.] You must sing a-down a-down,
An you call him a-down-a.
O, how the wheel becomes it!
Shak., Hamlet, iv. 5. 172.

6. A factory for grinding cutlery. [Prov. Eng.]

This branch of trade [cutlery grinding] is, in Sheffield, conducted in distinct establishments called wheels.
Encyc. Brit., VI. 734.

7. A dollar. Tufts. [Thieves' jargon.]—8. In embroidery and fancy needlework, an opening, not necessarily circular, filled with radiating bars or brides of thread. It is a common form of decoration for collars and similar washable garments. Sometimes the radiating lines are interspersed with loops, festoons, and the like, or are of different lengths, so that a part of the opening will be filled with more bands than another part, producing diversity of pattern.

9. See ward[2], 11.—Adhesion of wheels to rails. See adhesion.—Aërohydrodynamic wheel. See aërohydrodynamic.—Bastard wheel. See bastard.—Big wheel. Same as large wheel. See spinning-wheel.—Blank wheel, a wheel having no teeth.—Cardiac wheel. See cardiac.—Center-discharge wheel, a turbine in which the water enters from the guide-blades at the periphery of the buckets, passes inward, and is discharged at the center, about the axis.—Chilled wheel. See chill[1].—Eccentric wheel. See eccentric.—Elliptical wheel. Same as elliptical gearing (which see, under gearing).—Engaged wheels. See engaged.—Epicycloidal wheel. See epicycloidal (with cut).—Fifth wheel. (a) In mech. See fifth. (b) Figuratively, something superfluous or useless.—Foundling-wheel, a cylindrical box revolving on an upright axis, placed in an aperture in the door or wall of a foundling-asylum. It enables any person to confide an infant to the care of the asylum without being seen.

The ruota or foundling-wheel still exists in 1222 of the communes, being frequent in the Neapolitan provinces and Sicily. Encyc. Brit., XIII. 449, note.

Impulse-wheel, a form of turbine water-wheel driven by the impulse of the mass of water which strikes the buckets.—Intermittent, internal, lapidary wheel. See the adjectives.—Long wheel, a workmen's name for a grindstone driven by a belt and a hand-wheel 5 or 6 feet in diameter, which is turned by a laborer stationed behind the grinder.—Mansell wheel, a railroad-wheel in which the hub is composed of two wrought- or cast-iron rings bolted together. Car-Builder's Dict.—Middle-shot wheel, in hydraul., a breast-wheel which receives the water at about the middle of its height. See cut under breast-wheel.—Multiple wheel, a form of slosh-wheel.—Multiplying wheel, a form of multiplying gearing; a geared wheel for converting slower movement into more rapid movement. See lantern-wheel.—Mutilated wheel. See mutilated (with cut).—Non-circular wheel, a wheel having a perimeter which is not circular, but is elliptical, scroll-shaped, hyperbolar, etc. Two such wheels are employed for transmitting a velocity of variable ratio between a pair of parallel axes. E. H. Knight.—Persian wheel, a water-lifting wheel; a bucket-wheel or noria; an apparatus in which buckets, jars, or box-chambers are arranged in a tangential position on a large wheel, which by its revolution dips the vessels in the water, fills them, and raises each in turn to empty its load on another level. It is used especially for irrigation. Compare cut under noria.—Pitch-back wheel, a form of water-wheel in which the water, before descending into the buckets, is turned at an angle with its course in the flume: a kind of breast-wheel in which the water-supply is near the top of the wheel.—Potters' wheel. See potter[1] (with cut).—Savart's wheel, an acoustical instrument, consisting of a toothed wheel which can be rapidly rotated so as to strike against a card and produce a tone, the vibration-number of which can be accurately determined from the number of the revolutions of the wheel. Compare siren (with cut).—Saxon wheel. See spinning-wheel.—Skew wheel. See skew[1], 8.—Small wheel. See spinning-wheel.—Spiral wheels, in mach., a form of gearing in which the teeth are formed upon the circumference of cylinders of the required diameter at an angle with their respective axes. By this construction the teeth become in fact small parts of screws or spirals winding round the cylinders (whence the name). Wheels of this kind are often used when the two shafts require to pass each other. When the shafts are in the same plane bevel-wheels are employed.—Split wheel. See split gear, under split.—Sun-and-planet wheels. See sun[1].—To break a butterfly (fly, etc.) upon a (the) wheel, to subject one to a punishment out of all proportion to the gravity of the offense and the importance of the offender; hence, to employ great means or exertions for the attainment of trifling ends.

Satire or sense, alas! can Sporus feel,
Who breaks a butterfly upon a wheel?
Pope, Prol. to Satires, l. 308.

He was sorry . . . for the excellent people, and deplored the necessity of breaking mere house-flies on the wheel.
Dickens, Little Dorrit, ii. 21.

To break upon the wheel. See break.—Toothed wheels. See toothed.—To put a spoke in one's wheel. See spoke[1].—To put one's shoulder to the wheel. See shoulder.—To slack over the wheel. See slack[1].—To steer a trick at the wheel. See steer[1].—Undershot wheel. See undershot.—Variable-speed wheels. See variable.—Waved wheel, in mech., a friction-wheel having a waved or convoluted surface, and imparting a reciprocating motion to an arc or lever pressing against its side. E. H. Knight.—Wheel and axle, one of the mechanical powers, consisting in its primary form of a cylindrical axle on which a wheel, concentric with the axle, is firmly fastened. A rope is usually attached to the wheel; the axle is turned by means of a lever; and the rope acts as in the pulley—that is, also upon the principle of the lever.—Wheel barometer, a modification of the siphon barometer. See barometer.—Wheel couching. See couching[1], 5.—Wheel crossbow, a crossbow in which the bow is bent by the revolutions of a wheel acting as a windlass. See cut under moulinet.—Wheel-cutting machine. (a) A gear-cutting machine. (b) A device for dividing a circle into any number of equal parts. E. H. Knight.—Wheel-facing machine, a machine with adjustable cutters and rolls for facing the sides of wheels, making the fellies of uniform thickness, and forming a bevel. E. H. Knight.—Wheel-finishing machine, a form of slotting-machine for planing off the inner face of locomotive-wheel tires. The cutter is carried at the end of a vibrating lever.—Wheel of life. See zoötrope.—Wheel press, in the manufacture of locomotives and railway-cars, a powerful screw-press or hydraulic press by which wheels are forced on to turned bearings of axles with a frictional binding stress sufficient to hold them in place firmly without keys, set-screws, or other holding devices.—Wheels within wheels, a complication of circumstances, motives, influences, etc. Compare Ezek. i. 16.

It was notorious that, after this secretary retired, the king's affairs went backwards; wheels within wheels took place. Roger North, Lord Guilford, II. 65.

Wheel tax. See tax.—Wire wheel, a brush-wheel made of wire instead of bristles, used for cleaning and scratching metals preparatory to gilding or silvering. E. H. Knight. (See also breast-wheel, bull-wheel, catharine-wheel, cog-wheel, crown-wheel, dial-wheel, flange-wheel, measuring-wheel, pinwheel.)

wheel[1] (hwēl), v. [< ME. whelen*, whielen, hweolen; < wheel[1], n.] I. trans. 1. To cause to turn, or to move in a circle; make to rotate, revolve, or change direction.

So had he seen, in fair Castile,
The youth in glittering squadrons start;
Suddenly the flying jennet wheel,
And hurl the unexpected dart.
Scott, L. of L. M., ii. 8.

The sun gradually wheeled his broad disk down into the west. Irving, Sketch-Book, p. 438.

The Sun flies forward to his brother Sun;
The dark Earth follows wheel'd in her ellipse;
And human things returning on themselves
Move onward, leading up the golden year.
Tennyson, Golden Year.

To wheel the wild scrub cattle at the yard
With a running fire of stockwhips and a fiery run of hoofs.
Contemporary Rev., LII. 405.

2. To convey on wheels or in a vehicle mounted on wheels.

You shall clap her into a post-chaise, . . . wheel her down to Scotland. Colman, Jealous Wife, i.

"Wheel me a little farther," said her ladyship. "They will follow." I obeyed her again, and wheeled her away from the house with extreme slowness.
D. Christie Murray, Weaker Vessel, xxxviii.

3. To make or perform in a circle; give a circular direction or form to.

Now heaven in all her glory shone, and roll'd
Her motions, as the great first Mover's hand
First wheel'd their course. Milton, P. L., vii. 501.

The silvered kite
In many a whistling circle wheels her flight.
Wordsworth, An Evening Walk.

4. To provide with a wheel or wheels: as, to wheel a cart. Imp. Dict.—5. To cause to move on or as on wheels; rotate; cause to turn: as, to wheel a rank of soldiers.

Let fall the curtains, wheel the sofa round.
Cowper, Task, iv. 37.

6†. To turn on a wheel.

Fortune on lofte
And under eft gan hem to whielen bothe.
Chaucer, Troilus, i. 139.

To give, deserve, or win the whetstone†, old phrases in which a whetstone appears as the proverbial prize for lying. Confirmed liars or slanderers were sometimes publicly exhibited with a whetstone fastened to them. Compare the following allusions.

If Mother Hubbard, in the vein of Chaucer, happened to tell one canicular tale, father Elderton and his son Greene, in the vein of Skelton, or Scoggin, will counterfeit an hundred dogged fables, libels, calumnies, slanders, lies for the whetstone, what not. G. Harvey, Four Letters.

The whettstone is a knave that all men know,
Yet many on him doe much cost bestowe:
Hee's us'd almost in every shoppe, but whye?
An edge must needs be set on every lye.
Quoted in Chamber's Book of Days, II. 45.

This will explain a smart repartee of Sir Francis Bacon's before King James, to whom Sir Kenelm Digby was relating that he had seen the true philosopher's stone in the possession of a hermit in Italy, and when the king was very curious to understand what sort of stone it was, and Sir Kenelm much puzzled in describing it, Sir Fra. Bacon interposed, and said, "Perhaps it was a whetstone."
Z. Grey.

whetstone-slate (hwet'stōn-slāt), n. Same as whet-slate.

(b) As indicating one of a number of known or specified things: as, be careful which way you turn.

Never to unfold to any one Which casket 'twas I chose.
Shak., M. of V., ii. 9. 11.

[Which was formerly used as a clause-connective, along with a personal pronoun which took its place as subject or object, and rendered it redundant save as in its relative value: as, which . . . he = who; which . . . his = whose.

Lo! this is he,
Which that myn uncle swerth he moot be dede,
But I on hym have mercy and pite.
Chaucer, Troilus, ii. 654.

The Kynges dere sone,
The goode, wyse, worthy, fresshe, and free,
Which alwey for to don wel is his wone.
Chaucer, Troilus, ii. 318.

He that will mould a modern Bishop into a primitive must yeeld him to be elected by the popular voyce, undiocest, unrevenu'd, unlorded, and leave him nothing but brotherly equality, matchless temperance, frequent fasting, incessant prayer, and preaching, continual watchings, and labours in his Ministery—which what a rich bootie it would be, what a plump endowment to the many-benefice-gaping mouth of a Prelate!
Milton, Reformation in Eng., i.

A relic of this construction survives in the vulgar use of which as a general introductory word.

"That noble young fellow," says my general; "that noble, noble Philip Firmin." Which noble his conduct I own it has been. Thackeray, Philip, xvi.

Which I wish to remark . . .
That for ways that are dark . . .
The heathen Chinee is peculiar,
Which the same I would rise to explain.

whidah (hwid'ä), n. [Also whydah, whidaw, whydaw; taken as < Hwida, in Dahomey, but perhaps a corruption of widow. See Vidua.] Same as whidah-bird.—Whidah thrush. See thrush[1].

whidah-bird (hwid'ä-bėrd), n. [Also whydah-bird, widow-bird; taken as < Hwida, in Dahomey, where the birds abound: see whidah, and Necklaced Whidah-bird (Coliuspasser or Penthetria ardens), male.

cf. Vidua.] An oscine passerine bird of Africa, belonging to the family Ploceidæ, or weaver-birds, and subfamily Viduinæ in a strict sense, and especially to the genus Vidua, or one of two or three closely related genera. They are small-bodied birds, about as large as a canary; but the males have several feathers of the tail enormously lengthened and variously shaped, forming a beautiful arched train. Any one of them is also called whidah-finch, vidah-finch, widow-bird, and simply whidah or widow, as well as by the French name veuve. The original whidah-bird, or widow of paradise, is Vidua (or Steganura) paradisea, described and figured under Viduinæ (which see). The king whidah-bird is Videstrelda regia (see Videstrelda, with cut). The principal whidah-bird is Vidua principalis (see Vidua, with cut). The South African necklaced whidah-bird is Coliuspasser or Penthetria ardens, the male of which is 12 inches long, with a tail of 8½, and has the plumage nearly uniform black, normally varied with a scarlet (sometimes orange) necklace or collar on the foreneck. The female is quite different, and only 4¾ inches long. This bird has been known for more than a century, and has acquired an extensive and intricate synonymy, chiefly of worthless New Latin names. The other whidah here figured is also South African, and has in the male a train of several long tail-feathers resembling in development and in general effect the upper tail-coverts of the paradise-trogon; it is also very large, the male being about 19 inches long. This is Chera procne, the epaulet whidah, so called from the scarlet shoulders, in translation of a French name. Its original technical name was Emberiza procne (of Boddaert, 1783, whence Chera procne of most modern writers), and it used to be called Emberiza or Fringilla or Vidua longicauda, and Loxia or Fringilla or Chera caffra; but it is a monotype whose synonymy presents no serious difficulty. It inhabits from Cape Colony to Natal and the Transvaal, and also to Benguela. Other whidah-birds are noted under Viduinæ (which see).

Epaulet Whidah-bird (Chera procne), male.

whidah-finch (hwid'ä-finch), n. A whidah-bird. Also widow-finch.

whidder (hwid'ėr), v. i. [Cf. whid[1].] 1. To shake; tremble. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]—2. To whid; whizz. [Scotch.]

He heard the bows that bauldly ring,
And arrows whidderan' hym near bi.
Sang of the Outlaw Murray (Child's Ballads, VI. 25).

whiew, v. i. See whew[2], 1.

whiff[1] (hwif), n. [Cf. W. chwiff, a whiff, puff, chwiffio, puff, chwaff, a gust; Dan. vift, a puff, gust. Cf. also waff[1], puff, fuff, G. piff, paff, similar imitative words. Hence whiffle.] 1. A slight blast or gust of air; especially, a puff of air conveying some smell.

Pyrrhus at Priam drives; in rage strikes wide;
But with the whiff and wind of his fell sword
The unnerved father falls. Shak., Hamlet, ii. 2. 495.

For when it [my nose] does get hold of a pleasant whiff or so, . . . it's generally from somebody else's dinner, a-coming home from the baker's. Dickens, Chimes, i.

2†. A quick inhalation of air, and especially of smoke; a drawing or drinking in of smoke; also, a draught or drink, as of wine or liquid.

To entertain the most gentlemanlike use of tobacco; . . . the rare corollary and practice of the Cuban ebolition, euripus, and whiff.
B. Jonson, Every Man out of his Humour, iii. 1.

Whiff, indeed, occurs in a dull, prosing account of tobacco in the Queen's Arcadia, from which, as well as from what our author says elsewhere, it would seem to be either a swallowing of the smoke, or a retaining it in the throat for a given space of time.
Gifford, Note to the above passage.

Then let him shew his several tricks in taking it [tobacco], as the whiff, the ring, &c., for these are complements that gain gentlemen no mean respect.
Dekker, Gull's Hornbook, p. 120.

I will yet go drink one whiff more.
Urquhart, tr. of Rabelais, i. 6.

3. A sudden expulsion of air, smoke, or the like from the mouth; a puff.

With wanton puffs their wauing locks to curl.
Sylvester, tr. of Du Bartas's Weeks, i. 2.

2. To drink. [Prov. Eng.]

II. trans. 1. To puff; puff out; exhale; blow: as, to whiff out rings of smoke.—2. To carry as by a slight blast or whiff of wind.

Old Empedocles's way, who, when he leapt into Ætna, having a dry sear body, and light, the smoke took him and whift him up into the moon.
B. Jonson, World in the Moon.

How was it scornfully whiffed aside!
Carlyle, French Rev., I. v. 2.

3†. To draw in; imbibe; inhale: said of air or smoke, and frequently of liquids also.

Every skull
And skip-iacke now will have his pipe of smoke,
And whiff it bravely till hee's like to choke.
Times' Whistle (E. E. T. S.), p. 71.

In this season we might press and make the wine, and in winter whiff it up. Urquhart, tr. of Rabelais, i. 27.

whiff[2] (hwif), n. [A special use of whiff[1], in the sense of 'a trifle.'] An anacanthine or malacopterygious fish of the family Pleuronectidæ, a kind of flatfish or flounder, the Microstomus kitt, found in British waters; the smear-dab, sail-fluke, or marysole.

whiff[3] (hwif), v. i. [An error for whip, v. i., 2.] To fish, as for mackerel, with a hand-line. See whiffing, n.

One might as well argue that, because bits of red flannel or of tobacco-pipe are highly successful baits in whiffing for Mackerel, therefore these substances form a "favourite food" of this fish. Nature, XLI. 538.

whiff[4] (hwif), n. [< wh(erry) + (sk)iff.] On the Thames, a light kind of outrigger boat. It is timber-built throughout, thus differing from a skiff, which is a racing-boat, usually of cedar, and covered with canvas for some distance at the bow and stern.

The whiff is a vessel which recommends itself to few save the ambitious freshman. . . . It combines the disadvantages of a dingey and a skiff, with the excellences of neither. Dickens's Dict. Oxford, p. 19.

whiffer (hwif'ėr), n. [< whiff[1] + -er[1].] One who whiffs.

Great tobacco-whiffers;
They would go near to rob with a pipe in their mouths.

whiffet (hwif'et), n. [< whiff[1] + -et[1].] 1. A little whiff. Imp. Dict. [Rare.]—2. A whipper-snapper; a whipster; any insignificant or worthless person. [U. S.]

The sneaks, whiffets, and surface rats.
Philadelphia Times, Aug. 1, 1883.

whiffing (hwif'ing), n. [Verbal n. of whiff[3], v.] 1. Surface-fishing with a hand-line.

Whiffing, the process of slowly towing the bait (sculling or pulling in the known haunts of the fish).
Field, Dec. 26, 1885. (Encyc. Dict.)

It [the whiting] is often caught by whiffing, when it gives good sport. Stand. Nat. Hist., III. 273.

2. A kind of hand-line used for taking mackerel, pollack, and the like.

whiffing-tackle (hwif'ing-tak*′*l), n. The tackle used in whiffing; surface-tackle.

whiffle (hwif'l), v.; pret. and pp. whiffled, ppr. whiffling. [Freq. of whiff[1]; perhaps confused with D. weifelen, waver.] I. intrans. 1. To blow in gusts; hence, to veer about, as the wind.

Two days before this storm began, the Wind whiffled about to the South, and back again to the East, and blew very faintly. Dampier, Voyages, II. iii. 66.

Seizing a shovel, he went by the back door to the front of the house, at a spot where the whiffling winds had left the earth nearly bare [of snow], and commenced his sub-nivean work. S. Judd, Margaret, i. 17.

2. To change from one opinion or course to another; use evasions; prevaricate; be fickle or unsteady; waver.

A person of a whiffling and unsteady turn of mind, who cannot keep close to a point of a controversy.
Watts, Improvement of the Mind, I. ix. § 27.

3. To trifle; talk idly. Phillips, 1706; Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

I am not like those officious and importunate sots who, by force, outrage, and violence, constrain an easy, good-natured fellow to whiffle, quaff, carouse, and what is worse.
Urquhart, tr. of Rabelais, iii., Prol.

II. trans. 1. To disperse with a puff; blow away; scatter.

Such as would whiffle away all these truths by resolving them into a mere moral allegory.
Dr. H. More, Epistles to the Seven Churches, ix. [(Latham.)

2. To cause to change, as from one opinion or course to another.

Every man ought to be stedfast and unmovable in them [the main things of religion], and not suffer himself to be whiffled out of them by an insignificant noise about the infallibility of a visible church. Tillotson, Sermons, lxv.

3. To shake or wave quickly. Donne.

whiffle† (hwif'l), n. [< whiffle, v., in sense of orig. verb.] A fife.

Whiffler, . . . one that plays on a Whiffle or Fife.
Bailey, 1727.

whiffler (hwif'lėr), n. [< whiffle + -er[1].] 1†. A piper or fifer.

His former transition was in the faire about the Jugglers; now he is at the Pageants among the Whifflers.
Milton, On Def. of Humb. Remonst.

2†. A herald or usher; a person who leads the way, or prepares the way, for another: probably so called because the pipers (see piper[1], 1) usually led the procession.

The deep-mouth'd sea,
Which like a mighty whiffler 'fore the king
Seems to prepare his way.
Shak., Hen. V., v., cho., l. 12.

The term [whiffler] is undoubtedly borrowed from whiffle, another name for a fife or small flute; for whifflers were originally those who preceded armies or processions as fifers or pipers. F. Douce, Illus. of Shakespeare, p. 311.

I can go in no corner but I meet with some of my whifflers in their accoutrements.
Chapman, Monsieur D'Olive, iii. 1.

The Whifflers of your inferior and Chiefe companies cleere the wayes before him.
Dekker, Seven Deadly Sins, p. 43.

Before the dame, and round about,
March'd whifflers and staffiers on foot.
S. Butler, Hudibras, II. ii. 650.

3. One who whiffles; one who changes frequently his opinion or course; one who uses shifts and evasions in argument; a fickle or unsteady person.

Your right whiffler indeed hangs himself in Saint Martin's, and not in Cheapside.
Dekker and Webster, Northward Ho, ii. 1.

Every whiffler in a laced coat . . . shall talk of the constitution. Swift.

4. A puffer of tobacco; a whiffer. Halliwell.—5. The whistlewing, or goldeneye duck. G. Trumbull, 1888. [Maryland.]

whifflery (hwif'lėr-i), n. The characteristics or habits of a whiffler; trifling; levity.

Life is no frivolity, or hypothetical coquetry or whifflery.
Carlyle, in Froude, Life in London, iii.

whiffletree (hwif'l-trē), n. [< whiffle, turn, + tree. Cf. whippletree, swingletree.] Same as swingletree.

whift (hwift), n. [Var. of whiff[1].] A whiff or waft; a breath; a snatch. [Rare.]

A sweep of lutestrings, laughs, and whifts of song.
Browning, Fra Lippo Lippi.

whig[1] (hwig), n. 1. Sour whey. Brockett. [Prov. Eng. and Scotch.]

With green cheese, clouted cream, with flawns and custard stor'd, Whig, cyder, and with whey, I domineer a lord.
Drayton, Muses' Elysium, vi.

Drinke Whig and sowre Milke, whilest I rince my Throat With Burdeaux and Canarie.
Heywood, English Traveller (ed. Pearson), i. 2.

2. Buttermilk. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

whig[2] (hwig), v.; pret. and pp. whigged, ppr. whigging. [Cf. Sc. whiggle, var. of wiggle: see wiggle.] I. intrans. To move at an easy and steady pace; jog. [Scotch.]

The Solemn League and Covenant
Came whigging up the hills, man.
Battle of Killiecrankie (Child's Ballads, VII. 155).

To whig awa' wi', to drive briskly on with. Jamieson.

I remember hearing a Highland farmer in Eskdale, after giving minute directions to those who drove the hearse of his wife how they were to cross some boggy land, conclude, "Now, lads, whig awa' wi' her."
Scott. (Jamieson.)

II. trans. To urge forward, as a horse. [Scotch.]

whig[3] (hwig), n. and a. [Formerly also whigg; prob. short for whiggamore, q. v.] I. n. 1. One of the adherents of the Presbyterian cause in Scotland about the middle of the seventeenth century: a name given in derision.

When in the teeth they dar'd our Whigs,
An' covenant true blues, man.
Burns, Battle of Sheriff-Muir.

I doubt I'll hae to tak the hills wi' the wild whigs, as they ca' them, and . . . be shot down like a mawkin at some dyke-side. Scott, Old Mortality, vii.

2. [cap.] A member of one of the two great political parties of Great Britain, the other being the Tories (later the Conservatives). The Whigs were the successors of the Roundheads of the Civil War and the Country party of the Restoration. The name was given to them about 1679 as a reproach by their opponents, the Court party, through a desire to confound them with the rebel Whigs of Scotland (see whig[3], 1). The Whigs favored the Revolution of 1688–9, and governed Great Britain for a long period in the eighteenth century. In general, they may be called the party of progress; one of their principal achievements was the passage of the Reform Bill in 1832. About the same time the name Whig began to be replaced by Liberal, though still retained to denote the more conservative members of the Liberal party. See Liberal, Tory.

The south-west counties of Scotland have seldom corn enough to serve them round the year: And . . . those in the west come in the summer to buy at Leith the stores that come from the north: And from a word, Whiggam, used in driving their horses, all that drove were called the Whiggamors, and shorter the Whigs. Now in that year, after the news came down of Duke Hamilton's defeat, the Ministers animated their people to rise, and march to Edinburgh. And they came up marching on the head of their parishes, with an unheard-of fury, praying and preaching all the way as they came. The Marquis of Argile and his party came and headed them, they being about 6,000. This was called the Whiggamor's inroad. And ever after that all that opposed the Court came in contempt to be called Whiggs. And from Scotland the word was brought into England, where it is now one of our unhappy terms of distinction. Bp. Burnet, Hist. Own Times, I. 58.

I hate a Whig so much that I'll throw my Husband out of his Election, or throw myself out of the World! a Parcel of canting Rogues; they have always Moderation in their Mouths—rank Resistance in their Hearts—and hate Obedience even to their lawful Wives.
Mrs. Centlivre, Gotham Election, i. 1.

The prejudice of the Tory is for establishment; the prejudice of the Whig is for innovation. A Tory does not wish to give more real power to Government, but that Government should have more reverence. Then they differ as to the Church. The Tory is not for giving more legal power to the Clergy, but wishes they should have a considerable influence, founded on the opinion of mankind; the Whig is for limiting and watching them with a narrow jealousy.
Johnson, in Boswell, an. 1781.

3. [cap.] In Amer. hist.: (a) A member of the patriotic party during the revolutionary period.

The Hessians and other foreigners, looking upon that as the right of war, plunder wherever they go, from both Whigs and Tories, without distinction.
Robert Morris, Dec. 21, 1776, quoted in Lecky's Eng. in [18th Cent., xiv.

(b) One of a political party in the United States which grew up, in opposition to the Democratic party, out of the National Republican party. It was first called the Whig party in 1834. Its original principles were extension of nationalizing tendencies, and support of the United States Bank, of a protective tariff, and of a system of internal improvements at national expense. It won the presidential elections of 1840 and 1848, but soon after divided upon the slavery question. It lost its last national election in 1852, and soon after many of its members became temporarily members of the American and Constitutional Union parties, but eventually most of its northern members became Republicans, most of its southern members Democrats.—Conscience-Whig, in U. S. hist., in the last days of the Whig party, one of those northern Whigs who were indisposed to regard the compromise of 1850 as a final settlement of the slavery question: so called from their conscientious objections to such compromises with slavery.—Cotton-Whig, in U. S. hist., in the last days of the Whig party, one of those northern Whigs who were disposed to regard the compromise of 1850 as a final settlement of the slavery question: so called from their supposed partiality to the cotton interest.

II. a. Relating to or composed of Whigs, in any use of that word; whiggish: as, Whig measures; a Whig ministry.

The hope that America would supply the main materials for the suppression of the revolt [the American Revolution] proved wholly chimerical. One of the first acts of the Whig party in every colony was to disarm Tories.
Lecky, Eng. in 18th Cent., xiv.

The Whig party was always opposed to slavery. But there was a broad and well-understood distinction between Whig opponents of slavery and the fanatical Abolitionists. T. W. Barnes, Thurlow Weed, p. 306.

whig[4] (hwig), n. A variant of wig[2]. [North. Eng. and Scotch.]

A cook whose recipes were hopelessly old-fashioned, and who had an exasperating belief in the sufficiency of buttered whigs and home-made marmalade for all requirements. Mrs. Humphry Ward, Robert Elsmere, ii.

whiggamore (hwig'a-mōr), n. [Also whiggamor, whigamore; according to Burnet, derived from whiggam, as used by the men orig. called whiggamores (def. 1) in driving their horses; whiggam is a dubious word, appar. connected with whig[2], jog: see whig[2]. In the glossary to the Waverley novels whigamore is defined "a great whig," appar. implying a derivation < whig[3] + Gael. mor, great; whereas the evidence indicates that whig[3] is an abbr. of whiggamore. No Gael. form that could be the base of whiggamore appears; but it may be a perverted form from an original not now obvious.] 1. A person who came from the west and southwest of Scotland to Leith to buy corn. See the quotation from Bishop Burnet, under Whig[3], 2.—2. One of the people of the west of Scotland who marched to Edinburgh in 1648, their expedition being called the whiggamores' inroad (see the quotation referred to in def. 1). Hence—3. A Scotch Presbyterian; one of the party opposed to the court; a whig.

There [at Bothwell Brigg] was he and that sour whigamore they ca'd Burley. Scott, Old Mortality, xxxvii.

whiggarchy (hwig'är-ki), n. [< whig[3] + Gr. ἀρχειν, rule.] Government by Whigs. [Rare.]

They will not recognise any other government in Great Britain but whiggarchy only.
Swift, App. to Conduct of the Allies.

whiggery (hwig'ėr-i), n. [< whig[3] + -ery.] The principles or practices of Whigs: first applied to the Scottish Presbyterian doctrine, and generally used as a term of contempt.

I'll hae nae whiggery in the barony of Tillietudlem—the next thing wad be to set up a conventicle in my very withdrawing room. Scott, Old Mortality, vii.

Our friend was a hearty toper in the days of his Whiggery, but no sooner turned one of the tautest of Tories than he took to the teapot. It seems a thing against nature. Noctes Ambrosianæ, Sept., 1832.

whiggification (hwig″i-fi-kā′shon), n. [< whig[3] + -i-fication.] A making or becoming whiggish. [Humorous.]

We were all along against the whiggification of the Tory System. Noctes Ambrosianæ, Sept., 1832.

whiggish (hwig′ish), a. [< whig[3] + -ish[1].] Of or pertaining to whigs, in any application of the name; partaking of the principles of whigs.

To the shame and grief of every whiggish, loyal, and true Protestant heart. Swift, Polite Conversation, Int.

whiggishly (hwig′ish-li), adv. In a whiggish manner.

Being whiggishly inclined, [Thomas Cox] was deprived of that Office in Oct., 1683. Wood, Fasti Oxon., II. 54.

whiggishness (hwig′ish-nes), n. The character of being whiggish; whiggery.

Mr. Walpole has himself that trait of Whiggishness which peculiarly fits him to paint the portrait of the chief of the Whigs. The Academy, Nov. 16, 1889, p. 311.

whiggism (hwig′izm), n. [< whig[3] + -ism.] The principles of the whigs; whiggery.

As if whiggism were an admirable cordial in the mass, though the several ingredients are rank poisons. Dryden, Vind. of Duke of Guise.

whigling (hwig′ling), n. [< whig[3] + -ling[1].] A whig, in any sense: used in contempt. Spectator. (Imp. Dict.) whigmaleerie, whigmeleerie (hwig-mā-, hwig-mē-lē′ri), n. [Also whigmaleery; origin obscure; appar. a fantastic name.] Any fantastical ornament; a trinket; a knickknack; also, a whim or crotchet. Also used attributively. [Scotch.]

Some fewer whigmaleeries in your noddle. Burns, Brigs of Ayr.

Ah! it's a brave kirk—nane o' yere whigmaleeries and curliewurlies and open-steek hems about it—a' solid, weel-jointed mason-wark. Scott, Rob Roy, xix.

I met ane very honest, fair-spoken, weel-put-on gentleman, . . . that was in the whigmaleery man's [silversmith's] back shop. Scott, Fortunes of Nigel, iii.

whigship (hwig′ship), n. [< whig[3] + -ship.] Whiggism. [Rare.]

People of your cast in politics are fond of vilifying our country. Is this your Whigship? Landor, Imag. Conv., Johnson and John Horne (Tooke), i.

while[1] (hwīl), n. [< ME. while, whil, whyle, qvile, wile, hwile, < AS. hwīl, a time, = OS. hwila = OFries. hwile, wile = D. wijl = LG. wile = OHG. wila, MHG. wīle, G. weile, time, period or point of time, hour, = Icel. hvila, place of rest, bed, = Sw. hvila = Dan. hvile, rest, = Goth. hweila, a time, season; perhaps akin to OBulg. po-chiti, rest, L. quies, rest: see quiet.] 1. A time; a space of time; especially, a short space of time during which something happens or is to happen or be done.

That brought such wanderer to our isle!
Scott, L. of the L., ii. 15.

What Cambridge saw not strikes us yet
As scarcely worth one's while to see.
Lowell, To Holmes.

Alas the while. See alas.—Every once in a while. See every[1].—In the mean while. See mean[3], 3.—The while, the whilest, during the time something else is going on; in the mean time: from this expression the conjunctive use is derived.

Do the body speke so Right as hit woned was to do,
The whyles that it was on lyve?
Chaucer, Death of Blanche, l. 151.

The whiles, with hollow throates,
The Choristers the joyous Antheme sing.
Spenser, Epithalamion, l. 220.

If you'll sit down,
I'll bear your logs the while.
Shak., Tempest, iii. 1. 24.

Worth while, worth the time which it requires; worth the time and pains; worth the trouble and expense. See def. 2, above.

What fate has disposed of the papers, 'tis not worth while to tell. Locke.

How! don't you think it worth while to agree in the lie? Sheridan, School for Scandal, iv. 3.

while[1] (hwīl), conj. and adv. [< ME. while, whil, whyl, hwile, etc. (= MHG. wīle, G. weil, because); abbr. of the orig. phrase the while that, < AS. thā hwīle the (MHG. die wile, G. die weil), 'the while that,' where hwile is acc. of hwīl, while, time (other constructions also being used; cf. 2. At the same time that: often used adversatively.

He wonder'd that your lordship
Would suffer him to spend his youth at home,
While other men, of slender reputation,
Put forth their sons to seek preferment out.
Shak., T. G. of V., i. 3. 6.

While we condemn the politics, we cannot but respect the principles, of the man. Prescott, Ferd. and Isa., ii. 25.

3. Till; until. [Now prov. Eng. and U. S.]

We will keep ourself
Till supper-time alone; while then, God be with you!
Shak., Macbeth, iii. 1. 44.

A younger brother, but in some disgrace
Now with my friends; and want some little means
To keep me upright, while things be reconciled.
B. Jonson, Devil is an Ass, i. 2.

At Maltby there lived, some years ago, a retired druggist. The boys' Sunday-school was confided to his management, and he had a way of appealing to them when they were disorderly which is still quoted by those who often heard it: "Now, boys, I can't do nothing while you are quiet." J. Earle.

=Syn. 2. While, Though. While implies less of contrast in the parallel than though, sometimes, indeed, implying no contrast at all. Thus we say, "While I admire his bravery, I esteem his moderation;" but "though I admire his courage, I detest his cruelty."

II.† adv. At times; sometimes; now and then: used in correlation as while . . . while. Compare whiles, adv.

It is 9 to 10 inches long, and 16 to 18 in extent of wings (being thus much smaller than the chuck-will's-widow), and lacks the lateral filaments of the rictal bristles. The coloration is intimately variegated with gray, black, white, and tawny, giving a prevailing gray or neutral tone, somewhat frosted or hoary in high-plumaged males, ordinarily more brownish; there are sharp black streaks on the head and back; the wings and their coverts are barred with rufous spots; the lateral tail-feathers are black, with a large terminal area white in the male, tawny in the female; and there is a throat-bar white in the male, tawny in the female. The bill is extremely small, but the mouth is deeply cleft, and as wide from one corner to the other as the whole length of the rictus (as figured under fissirostral). There has been some popular confusion between the whippoorwill and the night-hawk; they are not only distinct species, but belong to different genera, and their dissimilarity appears at a glance. Unlike the night-hawk, the whippoorwill is entirely nocturnal; it flies with noiseless wings, like the owl, and is oftener heard than seen. The notes which have given the name are trisyllabic (compare poor-will), and rapidly reiterated, with a strong accent on the last syllable; a click of the beak and some low muffled sounds may also be heard when the bird is very near. The eggs, two in number, are laid on the ground, or on a fallen log or stump, without any nest; they are creamy-white, heavily clouded and marked with brown and neutral tints, nearly equal-ended, and 1.25 by 0.90 inch in size. The young are covered with fluffy down. The whippoorwill inhabits the eastern half of the United States and British provinces; it breeds nearly throughout its range, but winters extralimitally. A western variety is sometimes specified as the Arizona whippoorwill; but the place of whippoorwills is mostly taken in the west by the poor-wills, as Nuttall's. Several other species of Antrostomus are found in Mexico and Central and South America.

Whippoorwill (Antrostomus vociferus).

The moan of the whip-poor-will from the hillside; the boding cry of the tree-toad, that harbinger of storm; the dreary hooting of the screech-owl.
Irving, Sketch-Book, p. 424.

whip-post† (hwip′pōst), n. Same as whipping-post.

If the stocks and whip-post cannot stay their extravagance, there remains only the jail-house.
Rev. T. Adams, Works, I. 18.

whippowill†, n. Same as whippoorwill.

whippy (hwip′i), a. and n. [Also whuppy; < whip + -y[1].] I. a. Active; nimble; forward; pert. Jamieson.

Out, carter;
Hence, dirty whipstock; hence, you foul clown.
Be gone. T. Tomkis (?), Albumazar, iv. 4.

Phoebus, when
He broke his whipstock, and exclaim'd against
The horses of the sun.
Fletcher (and another), Two Noble Kinsmen, i. 2.

whip-tail, whip-tailed (hwip'tāl, -tāld), a. Having a long, slender tail like a whip-lash: as, the whip-tail scorpion. See whip-scorpion.

whip-tom-kelly (hwip'tom-kel'i), n. The black-whiskered vireo or greenlet of Cuba, the Bahamas, and Florida, Vireo barbatulus: so called in imitation of its note. It closely resembles the common red-eyed vireo of the United States, but has black mystacial stripes. Compare cut under greenlet.

whip-top (hwip'top), n. A top which is spun by whipping. Also whipping-top.

We have hitherto been speaking of the whip-top; for the peg-top, I believe, must be ranked among the modern inventions, and probably originated from the te-totums and whirligigs. Strutt, Sports and Pastimes, p. 492.

whip-worm (hwip'wėrm), n. A nematoid parasitic worm, Trichocephalus dispar, or another of this genus, as T. affinis, the cæcum-worm of sheep. They have a long, slender anterior part and a short, stout posterior part, like a whip-lash joined to a whip-stock.

whir (hwėr), v.; pret. and pp. whirred, ppr. whirring. [Also whirr, and formerly whur; prob. < Dan. hvirre, whirl, twirl, = Sw. dial. hwirra, whirl; cf. G. schwirren, whir, buzz. Cf. whirl.] I. intrans. To fly, dart, revolve, or otherwise move quickly with a whizzing or buzzing sound; whizz.

When the stone sprung back again, and smote
Earth, like a whirlwind, gath'ring dust with whirring fiercely round,
For fervour of his unspent strength, in settling on the ground. Chapman, Iliad, xiv. 343.

The lark
Whirred from among the fern beneath our feet.
Wordsworth, The Borderers, iii.

The blue blaze whirred up the chimney and flashed into the room. S. Judd, Margaret, i. 13.

And the whirring sail [of the windmill] goes round.
Tennyson, The Owl, i.

This world to me is like a lasting storm,
Whirring me from my friends.
Shak., Pericles, iv. 1. 21.

whir (hwėr), n. [Also whirr; < whir, v.] 1. The buzzing or whirring sound made by a quickly revolving wheel, a partridge's wings, etc.

As my lord's brougham drives up, . . . the ladies, who know the whirr of the wheels, and may be quarreling in the drawing-room, call a truce to the fight.
Thackeray, Philip, iv.

2†. A turn; commotion.

They flapt the door full in my face, and gave me such a whurr here. Vanbrugh, Journey to London, ii. 1.

whirl (hwėrl), v. [Formerly also wherl, whurl; < ME. whirlen, whwirllen, wirlen, contr. from whervelen* = MD. wervelen, whirl, = G. wirbeln, whirl, = Icel. hvirfla = Sw. hvirfla = Dan. hvirvle, whirl; freq. of the verb represented by AS. hweorfan, etc., turn: see wherve, and cf. warble[1]. The E. verb is perhaps due to the Scand.; it depends in part on the noun.] I. trans. 1. To swing or turn rapidly round; rotate, or cause to revolve rapidly.

A-bowte cho whirllide a whele with her whitte hondez.
Morte Arthure (E. E. T. S.), l. 3261.

My thoughts are whirled like a potter's wheel.
Shak., 1 Hen. VI., i. 5. 19.

With that his faulchion he wherled about.
Robin Hood and the Stranger (Child's Ballads, V. 416).

2. To cast with a twirling or twisting motion; throw with a rapid whirl.

And proudest Turrets to the ground hath whurld.
Sylvester, tr. of Du Bartas's Weeks, i. 6.

First Sarpedon whirl'd his weighty lance.
Pope, Iliad, xvi. 585.

3. To carry swiftly away with or as if with a revolving or wheeling motion.

See, see the chariot, and those rushing wheels,
That whirl'd the Prophet up at Chebar flood.
Milton, The Passion, l. 37.

The last red leaf is whirl'd away.
Tennyson, In Memoriam, xv.

Uplifted by the blast, and whirled
Along the highway of the world.
Longfellow, Golden Legend, ii.

=Syn. 1. To twirl, spin, revolve, rotate.

II. intrans. 1. To turn rapidly; move round with velocity; revolve or rotate swiftly.

Four [moons] fixed, and the fifth did whirl about
The other four. Shak., K. John, iv. 2. 183.

This slippery globe of life whirls of itself.
Lowell, Parting of the Ways.

2. To pass or move with a rapid whirling motion, or as if on wheels.

I'll come and be thy waggoner,
And whirl along with thee about the globe.
Shak., Tit. And., v. 2. 49.

What thoughts of horror and madness whirl
Through the burning brain.
Whittier, Mogg Megone, i.

The supply of material in the world is practically constant; nothing drops off of it as we whirl through space, and the only thing added is some stray meteorite, insignificant except in the way of a sign or wonder.
Jour. Franklin Inst., CXXX. 88.

Whirling chair, an apparatus formerly used to subdue intractable patients in retreats for the insane. After the victim had been strapped in, the chair was made to revolve very rapidly.—Whirling dervish. See dervish.—★Whirling plant. Same as telegraph-plant.

whirl (hwėrl), n. [< ME. whirl (in comp.) = MD. wervel, worvel, a whirl, peg, a spinning-wheel, = OHG. wirbil, wirfil, a whirlwind, MHG. G. wirbel, a whirl, the crown of the head, = Icel. hvirfill, a circle, ring, the crown of the head: see whirl, v., and cf. wharl[1], whorl.] 1†. The whorl of a spindle.

A whirle, . . . a round Piece of Wood put on the spindle of a spinning-wheel. Bailey, 1731.

Medle you with your spyndle and your whirle.
Udall, Roister Doister, i. 3.

2. A reel or hook used in rope-making for twisting strands of hemp or gut.—3. A rope-winch. —4. In bot. and conch. See whorl.—5. A rapid circling motion or movement, as that of a revolving body; rapid rotation, gyration, or circumvolution: literally and figuratively: as, the whirl of a top or of a wheel; the whirls of fancy.

Thus I would prove the vicissitudes and whirl of pleasures about and again. B. Jonson, Cynthia's Revels, iv. 1.

Now with sprightly
Wheel downward come they into fresher skies; . . .
Still downward with capacious whirl they glide.
Keats, Sleep and Poetry.

6. Something that whirls, or moves with a rapid circling motion; the circling eddy of a whirlpool, a whirlwind, or the like.

What flaws, and whirls of weather,
Or rather storms, have been aloft these three days!
Fletcher, Pilgrim, iii. 6.

Upon the whirl, where sank the ship,
The boat spun round and round.
Coleridge, Ancient Mariner, vii.

★whirl-about (hwėrl'a-bout″), n. 1. Something that whirls with velocity; a whirligig.—2†. A great fish of the whale kind; a whirl-whale.

The monstrous Whirl-about,
Which in the Sea another Sea doth spout,
Where-with huge Vessels (if they happen nigh)
Are over-whelm'd and sunken suddenly.
Sylvester, tr. of Du Bartas's Weeks, i. 5.

whirlbat (hwėrl'bat), n. [Also, by confusion, hurlbat; < whirl + bat[1].] The ancient cestus, a kind of boxing-glove used by Greek and Roman athletes. See cuts under cestus[1], 2.

Your shoulders must not undergo the churlish whoorlbat's fall;
Wrastling is past you, strife in darts, the foot's celerity;
Harsh age in his years fetters you, and honour sets you free. Chapman, Iliad, xxiii. 538.

He rejected them, as Dares did the whirlbats of Eryx, when they were thrown before him by Entellus.
Dryden, Pref. to Fables.

whirlblast (hwėrl'blȧst), n. A whirling blast of wind; a whirlwind.

The whirl-blast comes, the desert sands rise up.
Coleridge, Night-Scene.

A whirl-blast from behind the hill
Rushed o'er the wood with startling sound.
Wordsworth, Poems of Fancy, iii.

Were this bitter whirl-blast fanged with flame,
To me 'twere summer, we being side by side.
Lowell, Paolo to Francesca.

whirlbone (hwėrl'bōn), n. [Early mod. E. also whyrlebone; < ME. whirlbon, whyrlebone, whorlebone (= MD. wervelben); < whirl + bone[1]. Hence, by confusion, hurlbone.] 1†. The bone of a ball-and-socket joint, as in the hip.

The . . . whirlebones of their hips, about which their hucklebones turne. Holland, tr. of Pliny, xxviii. 11.

2. The patella; the kneepan or stifle-bone.

Patella. . . . La palette du genouil. The whirlebone of the knee. Nomenclator. (Nares.) ★whirler (hwėr'lėr), n. [< whirl + -er[1].] 1. One who or that which whirls.—2. In rope-manuf., one of the revolving hooks to which the hemp is fastened in the operations of twisting it into rope-yarn or small rope.

whirl-fire† (hwėrl'fīr), n. Lightning.

The smoaking storms, the whirl-fire's crackling clash,
And deafening Thunders.
Sylvester, tr. of Du Bartas's Weeks, ii., The Lawe.

whirlgig (hwėrl'gig), n. Same as whirligig, 4.

whirlicote† (hwėr'li-kōt), n. [Appar. for whirlcote (cf. whirligig for whirlgig), < whirl + cote[1].] A wheel-carriage.

Of old time, Coaches were not known in this Iland, but Chariots or Whirlicotes, then so called, and they onely used for Princes or great Estates, such as had their footmen about them. Stow, Survey of London (ed. 1633), p. 70.

whirligig (hwėr'li-gig), n. and a. [Early mod. E. whirlygig, whyrlygigge; also whirlgig (in def. 4, with a var. whirlwig); < ME. whyrlegyge; < whirl + gig[1].] I. n. 1. Any toy or trivial object to which a rapid whirling motion is imparted. Especially—(a) A tee-totum, or a top.

I tryll a whirlygig rounde aboute. Je pirouette. . . . I holde the a peny that I wyll tryll my whirlygig longer about than thou shalte do thyne. Palsgrave, p. 762.

Hath the truth been hid in corners, that we must grope for it in a sectary's budget? Or are not such men rather sick of Donatism? That every novelist with a whirligig in his brain must broach new opinions!
Rev. T. Adams, Works, I. 180.

They [the gods] gave Things their Beginning,
And set this Whirligig a Spinning. Prior, The Ladle.

(b) A toy which children spin in the hand by means of string. (c) A carrousel or merry-go-round. (d) A toy resembling a miniature windmill, which children cause to spin or whirl round by moving it through the air.

2. Hence, anything that revolves or spins like a whirligig; also, spinning rotation; revolving or recurring course.

The whirligig of time brings in his revenges.
Shak., T. N., v. 1. 385.

3. In milit. antiq., an instrument for punishing petty offenders, as a kind of wooden cage turning on a pivot, in which the offender was whirled round with great velocity.—4. In entom., any one of numerous species of water-beetles of the family Gyrinidæ, as Gyrinus natator, usually seen in large numbers on the surface of the water, circling rapidly about, and diving only to escape danger. When caught, many exude a milky liquid having an odor of apples. They abound in fresh-water ponds, pools, and ditches. The larvæ are aquatic, and breathe by means of ciliate branchiæ. The American whirligigs belong to the genera Gyrinus, Dineutus, and Gyretes. See cut under Gyrinidæ. Also whirlgig, whirlwig, and whirlwig-beetle.

II.† a. Whirling.

Thrise to her bed sliding shee quayls, with whirlygig eyesight
Up to the sky staring. Stanihurst, Æneid, iv.

And so continuing their whirlegigg-deuotions with continuall turnings. Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 307.

whirling-table, whirling-machine (hwėr'ling-tā″bl, -ma-shēn″), n. 1. A machine contrived for the purpose of exhibiting the principal effects of centripetal or centrifugal forces, when bodies revolve in the circumferences of circles or on an axis.—2. In pottery, a potters' wheel for holding a plaster mold in which is laid a thin mass of clay, to form a plate or other circular piece. The mold shapes the inside of the piece, and a templet approached to the revolving mold forms the outside. See potters' wheel, under potter[1].

3. A horizontal arm mounted for rotation about a vertical axis, used in experiments in aërodynamics, in determining the constants of anemometers, or for other purposes for which high velocities are desired under conditions thus attainable.

whirl-pillar (hwėrl'pil″ėr), n. A waterspout; a dust-whirl.

whirlpit† (hwėrl'pit), n. [< whirl + pit[1].] A whirlpool.

The deepest whirl-pit of the rav'nous seas.
B. Jonson, Every Man out of his Humour, ii. 2.

This whirle-pit is said to have thrown up her wracks neer Tauromenia. Sandys, Travailes, p. 192.

whirlpool (hwėrl'pöl), n. [Early mod. E. whirlpoole, whirlpole; < whirl + pool[1].] 1. A circular eddy or current in a river or the sea produced by the configuration of the channel, by meeting currents, by winds meeting tides, etc. The celebrated whirlpool of Charybdis between Sicily and Italy, and the Maelstrom off the coast of Norway, are chiefly due to tidal currents; their violence is increased by storm-winds, and in calm weather they are free from danger. Instances of vortical motion, however, do occur, as in the whirlpool of Coryvreckan in the Hebrides, between Jura and Scarba, and in some eddies among the Orkneys. The famous whirlpool of Niagara river in the gorge below the cataract is due to the erosion of a side basin, out of line from the river course, in which the current turns at the surface and escapes (in part) underneath.

2†. Some huge sea-monster of the whale kind; a whirl-whale; a whirl-about.

The Indian Sea breedeth the most and the biggest fishes that are; among which the whales and whirlpools, called balænæ, take up in length as much as four acres or arpens of land. Holland, tr. of Pliny, i. 235. (Trench.) whirl-puff† (hwėrl'puf), n. [< ME. whirlpuff; < whirl + puff.] A whirlwind. Wyclif.

A whirle-puffe or ghust called Typhen.
Holland, tr. of Pliny, ii. 48.

whirlwater† (hwėrl'wâ″tėr), n. An old name for a waterspout.

There was no other water fell over the duke's water-gate than what came of the breaking there of the whirlwater, or, as some call it, the water-pillar.
Court and Times of Charles I., I. 114.

whirl-whale† (hwėrl'hwāl), n. A monster of the whale kind; a whirl-about; a whirlpool.

Another, swallowed in a Whirl-Whales womb,
Is laid a-live within a living Toomb.
Sylvester, tr. of Du Bartas's Weeks, ii., The Lawe.

whirlwig (hwėrl'wig), n. [A var. of whirlgig, perhaps simulating -wig in earwig.] Same as whirligig, 4.

whirlwind (hwėrl'wind), n. [< ME. whyrle-wynde, qwirl-wind, a whirling wind, = D. wervel-wind = G. wirbelwind = Icel. hvirfilvindr = Sw. hvirfvelvind = Dan. hvirvelvind, a whirlwind; as whirl + wind[2], n.] 1. A wind moving in a vortical, spiral, or circular path; a mass of air rotating rapidly round a vertical or slightly inclined axis, this axis having at the same time a progressive motion over the surface of the land or sea. Whirlwinds vary greatly in dimensions and intensity, the term including the miniature eddy that circles in the dusty street, the towering sand-pillars of the tropical deserts, the waterspout formed over bodies of water, and the destructive tornado of the United States. They arise when the atmosphere is in a condition of instability, and are one of the processes by which a stable condition is regained. General cyclonic storms, specifically known as 'hurricane,' 'typhoon,' 'cyclone,' 'baguio,' are included under the general term 'whirlwind' as first used by Dampier.

2. Figuratively, any wild circling rush resembling a whirlwind.

There the companions of his fall, o'erwhelm'd
With floods and whirlwinds of tempestuous fire,
He soon discerns. Milton, P. L., i. 77.

What a whirlwind is her head! Byron.

The deer was flying through the park, followed by the whirlwind of hounds and hunters.
Macaulay, Hist. Eng., xxi.

To sow the wind and reap the whirlwind. See wind[2].

whirl-worm (hwėrl'wėrm), n. A turbellarian; any member of the Turbellaria.

whirly-bat† (hwėr'li-bat), n. Same as whirl-bat.

Very true, and he also propos'd the fighting with Whirly-bats too, and I don't like that Sport.
N. Bailey, tr. of Colloquies of Erasmus, I. 84.

whirret† (hwir'et), n. [Perhaps from whir.] A slap; a blow. Also written wherret, whirrit, whirrick.

And in a fume gave Furius
A whirret on the eare.
Kendall, Flowers of Epigrams (1577). (Nares.)

I forthwith went, he following me at my heels, and now and then giving me a whirret on the ear, which, the way to my chamber lying through the hall where John Raunce was, he, poor man, might see and be sorry for, as I doubt not that he was, but could not help me.
T. Ellwood, Life (ed. Howells), p. 222.

Then there's your souse, your wherrit, and your dowst,
Tugs on the hair, your bob o' the lips,—a whelp on 't!
I ne'er could find much difference.
Fletcher (and another?), Nice Valour, iii. 2.

whirret† (hwir'et), v. t. [Also wherret, etc.; cf. whirret, n.] 1. To hurry; trouble; tease. Bickerstaff, Love in a Village, i. 5.—2. To give a box on the ear to. Beau. and Fl.

whirrick (hwir'ik), n. A variant of whirret.

Harry . . . gave master such a whirrick!
H. Brooke, Fool of Quality, I. 21. (Davies.)

whirrit†, n. and v. See whirret.

whirry (hwėr'i), v. [A dial. form of whir or of hurry.] I. intrans. To fly rapidly with noise; whir; hurry.

II. trans. To hurry. [Scotch in both uses.]

whirtle (hwėr'tl), n. [Origin obscure.] A perforated steel plate through which pipe or wire is drawn to reduce its diameter. E. H. Knight.

whish[1] (hwish), v. i. [Imitative; cf. whiz and swish.] To move with the whirring or whizzing sound of rapid motion.

The scenery of a long tragic drama flashed through his mind as the lightning-express train whishes by a station.
O. W. Holmes, Professor, vi.

whish[2]† (hwish), interj. [Var. of hush.] Hush.

What means this peevish babe? Whish, lullaby;
What ails my babe? what ails my babe to cry?
Quarles, Emblems, ii. 8.

whish[2]† (hwish), a. [Var. of hush.] Silent: same as hush, whisht, whist[1].

You took my answer well, and all was whish.
Sir J. Harington, Ep., i. 27.

Surrey, Æneid, ii.

Th' other nipt so nie
That whist I could not.
Mir. for Mags., p. 427.

★whist[2] (hwist), n. [A later form of whisk[2]. The change from whisk[2], a word of no very obvious significance after its first application, was prob. orig. accidental, or due to an unthinking conformity to whist[1]. The notion that the game was called whist "because the parties playing have to be whist or silent," etymologically improbable in itself, is based on the erroneous assumption that whist is the orig. name. The rule of silence, so far as it exists, is appar. founded, however, in part on the false etymology.] A game played with cards by four persons, two of them as partners in opposition to the other two, also partners. Partnership is determined by agreement or by cutting: if by agreement, two players, one on each side, cut for deal; if by cutting, the two who cut the lowest cards are partners, and the original deal belongs to the player who cuts the lowest card. The ace is the lowest card in cutting. Previous to play, the cards (a full pack) are shuffled. The player on the right of the dealer cuts, and the dealer, beginning with the player on his left, distributes in regular order to all the players, one at a time, the cards face downward, except the last card, which he turns face upward upon the table, at his right hand, where it must remain until his turn to play. This is the trump card, and the suit to which it belongs is the trump suit; the other three suits are plain suits. The leader is the dealer's left-hand player, who begins the play by throwing one of his thirteen cards face upward upon the center of the table. Second hand, the leader's left-hand player, follows with a card of the same suit if he holds one; if he does not hold one, with a card of a plain suit (a discard) or with a trump; third and fourth hands similarly follow; and the highest card or the highest trump played takes the trick. The trick is gathered by the partner of the winner; the four cards are made by him into a packet, and placed face downward, at his left hand, on the table. The winner becomes the leader, and the routine is continued until all the cards held are played. Tricks above six in number count a point each upon the score. The score is the record kept of the number of points made. In play the ace is highest, the king, queen, knave, 10, and 9 are also high cards, the 8 is the middle card, and the 7 to the 2 inclusive are low cards. The rank of the cards is in the above order: the queen will take the knave, the 6 will take the 5. The ace, king, queen, and knave of the trump suit are the honors. Any trump will take any plain-suit card. The usual practice is to play with two packs of cards, one of these being shuffled or "made up" by the partner of the dealer during the deal, and afterward placed by him on the left hand of the next dealer. The dealer has the privilege of shuffling before the cards are cut. The play is conducted with reference to combinations of cards held. By the system used the cards are made conversational. In English or short whist the table is complete with six candidates. When a rubber has been played by four of these (elected by cutting), the other two have right of entry. The game is of five points made by tricks and by honors as counted. Four honors held by a player, or in conjunction with his partner, count four points; three honors similarly held count two points. The winners of a game score a point (a single) if the adversaries have three or four points up; two points (a double) against one or two points up; and three points (a treble) against no score. A rubber (two games won in succession, or two won out of three) is always played. Two points for the rubber are added to the score of the rubber-winners. When three games are played, the value of the opponents' score is deducted from the winners' total. Exposed cards (cards seen when they should not be played) must be left face upward on the table, liable to an adversary's call; a card led out of turn may be called, or, instead, a card of another suit; cards played upon a trick may by any player be ordered to be placed before their respective players; a player may ask his partner if he holds a card of a suit in which he renounces; and any player may demand to see the last trick that has been turned. In American or standard whist four players form a table. These may agree upon or cut for partners. The game is of seven points, made of tricks and penalties. Credit for all points made by both sides is given, the winner of a rubber scoring the entire number of points made against the entire number made by the opponents. Cards are not called, a trick turned cannot be shown, honors are not counted, and conversation during play is not permitted. Penalties for speaking or demonstration, exposure of cards, or leading out of turn, and for revoking are payable in points after the last card of a hand is played and before the cards are cut for the next deal.

I affirm against Aristotle that cold and rain congregate homogenes, for they gather together you and your crew, at whist, punch, and claret.
Swift, To Dr. Sheridan, Jan. 25, 1725.

At Whist there is a constant endeavor on the part of one side to arrive at the maximum result for their hands by the use of observation, memory, inference, and judgment, their play being dependent from trick to trick on the inferred position of the unknown from observation of the known. Cavendish, Card Essays, p. 6.

American Whist is recreative work, enjoyable labor, paradoxical as that may seem; its riddle is fascination; its practice is intelligent employment; its play is mathematical induction; its result is intellectual gain.
American Whist Illus., p. 279.

Bridge whist, a variety of whist. See bridge[2] in the supplement.—Double-dummy whist. See double dummy, under dummy.—Dummy whist. See dummy, 5.—Duplicate whist, a modification of the game of whist in which by an arrangement of boards, indicators, and counters hands are preserved after having been once played, enabling them to be replayed by the opposing players.—Fancy whist, any form of play that introduces unauthorized methods.—Five-point whist, a game without counting honors, usually played under such short-whist laws as may be applied to it.—Long whist, a game of ten points with honors counting. This was the game of the eighteenth century, played at the English clubs until that of five points with honors counting, called by Clay short whist, was introduced.

In the author's opinion long whist (ten up) is a far finer game than short whist (five up). Short whist, however, has taken such a hold that there is no chance of our reverting to the former game. Cavendish, On Whist, p. 51.

Mongrel whist, a game played in accordance with laws or regulations selected from the two authorized methods.

whisterꝉ (hwis'tėr), v. t. [A var. of whisper, simulating whist[1].] To whisper; recite in a low voice.

Then returneth she home unto the sicke party, . . . and whistereth a certaine odde praier with a Pater Noster into his eare. Holland, tr. of Camden, II. 147. (Davies.) whistersnefeteꝉ, whistersnivetꝉ, n. [Origin obscure.] A hard blow; a buffet. [Slang.]

A good whistersnefet, truelie paied on his eare.
Udall, tr. of Apophthegms of Erasmus, p. 112.

whistle (hwis'l), v.; pret. and pp. whistled, ppr. whistling. [< ME. whistlen, whistelen, whystelen, < AS. hwistlian* (as seen in AS. hwistlere, a piper, whistler) = Icel. hvīsla, whisper, = Sw. hvissla, whistle, = Dan. hvisle, whistle, also hiss; freq. from an imitative base hwis:* see whisper.] I. intrans. 1. To utter a kind of musical sound by forcing the breath through a small orifice formed by contracting the lips.

Rigt as capones in a court cometh to mennes whistlynge
In menynge after mete. Piers Plowman (B), xv. 466.

A-noon as thei were with-drawen, Merlin whistelid lowde. Merlin (E. E. T. S.), iii. 666.

Now give me leve to whistell my fyll.
Playe of Robyn Hode (Child's Ballads, V. 424).

Just saddle your horse, young John Forsyth,
And whistle, and I'll come soon.
Eppie Morrie (Child's Ballads, VI. 263).

Whistle then to me,
As signal that thou hear'st something approach.
Shak., R. and J., v. 3. 7.

2. To emit a warbling or sharp, chirping sound or song, as a bird.

Latin was no more difficile
Than to a blackbird 'tis to whistle.
S. Butler, Hudibras, I. i. 54.

Hedge-crickets sing; and now with treble soft
The redbreast whistles from a garden-croft,
And gathering swallows twitter in the skies.
Keats, To Autumn.

3. To sound shrill or sharp; move or rush with shrill or whizzing sound.

The southern wind
Doth play the trumpet to his purposes,
And by his hollow whistling in the leaves
Foretells a tempest and a blustering day.
Shak., 1 Hen. IV., v. 1. 5.

A bullet whistled o'er his head. Byron, The Giaour.

4. To sound a whistle or similar wind- or steam-instrument: as, locomotives whistle at crossings.— 5. To give information by whistling; hence, to become informer.

I kept aye between him and her, for fear she had whistled.
Scott, Guy Mannering, xxxiii.

To go whistle, a milder expression for to go to the deuce, or the like.

This being done, let the law go whistle.
Shak., W. T., iv. 4. 715.

Your fame is secure; bid the critics go whistle.
Shenstone, The Poet and the Dun.

To whistle down the wind, to talk to no purpose; hold an idle or futile argument.—To whistle for, to summon by whistling.—To whistle for a wind, a superstitious practice among old seamen of whistling during a calm to obtain a breeze. Such men will not whistle during a storm.

"Do you not desire to be free?" "Desire! aye, that I do; but I may whistle for that wind long enough before it will blow." Johnston, Chrysal, II. 184. (Davies.)

Whistling coot, the American black scoter, Œdemia americana. [Connecticut.] See cut under Œdemia.—Whistling dick. (a) Same as whistling thrush. [Local, Eng.] (b) An Australian bird, Colluricincla (or Colluricincla or Collyriocincla) harmonica, the harmonic thrush of Latham, usually placed in the family Laniidæ, now in the Prionopidæ, or another of this genus, as the Tasmanian C. rectirostris (C. selbyi). The species named are 9½ to 10 inches long, chiefly of a gray color varied with brown and white.—Whistling duck. (a) The whistler or widgeon, a duck. (b) Same as whistling coot.—Whistling eagle, whistling hawk, Haliaëtus sphenurus (one of whose former names was Haliaëtus canorus, of Vigors and Horsfield, 1826), a small eagle or large hawk, 22 inches long, inhabiting the whole of Australia and New Caledonia. It is a congener of the wide-spread Pondicherry eagle, H. indus.—Whistling marmot, the hoary marmot. See cut under whistler, 1 (c).—Whistling plover. See plover.—Whistling râle, sibilant râle. See dry râle, under râle.—Whistling snipe. (a) Same as greenshank. (b) See snipe[1], 1 (c).—Whistling swan. (a) The hooper, elk, or whooping swan. See swan[1], 1. (b) In the United States, the common American swan, Cygnus americanus or columbianus, as distinguished from the trumpeter, C. (Olor) buccinator.—Whistling thrush, the song-thrush, Turdus musicus. See cut under thrush. [Local, Eng.]

II. trans. 1. To form, utter, or modulate by whistling: as, to whistle a tune or air.

Tunes . . . that he heard the carmen whistle.
Shak., 2 Hen. IV., iii. 2. 342.

I might as well . . . have whistled jigs to a mile-stone.
W. Collins, Moonstone, xxi.

2. To call, direct, or signal by or as by a whistle.

He cast off his friends, as a huntsman his pack,
For he knew when he pleased he could whistle them back.
Goldsmith, Retaliation.

The first blue-bird of spring whistled them back to the woods. Lowell, Harvard Anniversary.

3ꝉ. To send with a whistling sound.

The Spaniards, who lay as yet at a good distance from them behind the Bushes, as secure of their Prey, began to whistle now and then a shot among them.
Dampier, Voyages, I. 117.

To whistle off, to send off by a whistle; send from the fist in pursuit of prey: a term in falconry; hence, to dismiss or send away generally; turn loose. Nares remarks, on the quotation from Shakspere, that the hawk seems to have been usually cast off in this way against the wind when sent in pursuit of prey; with it, or down the wind, when turned loose or abandoned.

If I do prove her haggard,
Though that her jesses were my dear heart-strings,
I'ld whistle her off, and let her down the wind,
To prey at fortune. Shak., Othello, iii. 3. 262.

This is he,
Left to fill up your triumph; he that basely
Whistled his honour off to the wind.
Fletcher, Bonduca, iv. 3.

★whistle (hwis'l), n. [< ME. whistle, whistel, whystyl, wistle, < AS. hwistle, a whistle, a pipe: see whistle, v.] 1. A more or less piercing or sharp sound produced by forcing the breath through a small orifice formed by contracting the lips: as, the merry whistle of a boy.—2. Any similar sound. Especially—(a) The shrill note of a bird.

The great plover's human whistle.
Tennyson, Geraint.

(b) A sound of this kind produced on an instrument, especially one of the instruments called whistles. See def. 3.

Ship-boys . . .
Hear the shrill whistle which doth order give.
Shak., Hen. V., iii., Prol.

Sooner the whistle of a mariner Shall sleeke the rough curbs of the ocean back.
Marston, What You Will, v. 1.

(c) A sound made by the wind blowing through branches of trees, the rigging of a vessel, etc., or by a flying missile. (d) A call or signal made by whistling.

Such a high calling therefore as this sends not for those drossy spirits that need the lure and whistle of earthly preferment, like those animals that fetch and carry for a morsell. Milton, On Def. of Humb. Remonst.

They [of Scio] have now no domestic partridges that come at a whistle, but great plenty of wild ones of the red sort. Pococke, Description of the East, II. ii. 9.

3. An instrument or apparatus for producing a whistling sound. Whistles are of various shapes and sizes, but they all utilize the principle of the direct flute or flageolet—that of a stream of air so directed through a tube as to impinge on a sharp edge.

With qwistlis, & qwes, & other qwaint gere,
Melody of mowthe myrthe for to-here.
Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), l. 6051.

A whistle seems to have been a badge of high command in the navy in the sixteenth century. One is mentioned in the will of Sir Edward Howard (1512) as hung from a rich chain. Fairholt.

Specifically—(a) The small pipe used in signaling, etc.,

Boatswains' Whistle.

by boatswains, huntsmen, policemen, etc. (b) A small tin or wooden tube, fitted with a mouthpiece and pierced generally with six holes, used as a musical toy. Often called a penny whistle. See flageolet. (c) An instrument sounded by escaping steam, used for giving signals, alarms, etc., on railway-engines, steamships, etc. See cuts under steam-whistle and passenger-engine.—At one's whistle, at one's call.

Ready at his whistle to array themselves round him in arms against the commander in chief.
Macaulay, Hist. Eng., xiii.

Galton's whistle, an instrument for testing the power to hear shrill notes.—To pay for one's whistle, or to pay dear for one's whistle, to pay a high price for something one fancies; pay dearly for indulging one's whim, caprice, fancy, or the like. The allusion is to the story Benjamin Franklin tells (Works, ed. 1836, II. 182) of his setting his mind upon a common whistle and buying it for four times its real value.

If a man likes to do it, he must pay for his whistle.
George Eliot, Daniel Deronda, xxxv. (Davies.)

To wet one's whistle, to take a drink of liquor, perhaps with reference to the wetting of a wooden whistle to improve the tone, perhaps merely in comparison of the throat and vocal organs with a musical instrument. Sometimes, erroneously, to whet one's whistle. [Colloquial and jocose.]

As any jay she light was and joly*f*,
So was hir joly whistle wel ywet.
Chaucer, Reeve's Tale, l. 235.

I wete my whystell, as good drinkers do. Je crocque la pie. Wyll you wete your whystell? Palsgrave, p. 780.

Worth the whistle, worth the trouble or pains of calling for.

I have been worth the whistle. Shak., Lear, iv. 2. 29.

whistle-belly (hwis'l-bel″i), a. That causes rumbling or whistling in the belly. [Slang.]

"I thought you wouldn't appreciate the widow's tap," said East, watching him with a grin. "Regular whistle-belly vengeance, and no mistake!"
T. Hughes, Tom Brown at Oxford, II. xviii.

whistle-cup (hwis'l-kup), n. A drinking-cup having a whistle appended, awarded, as a prize in a drinking-bout, to the last person able to blow it.

whistle-drunk (hwis'l-drungk), a. Too drunk to whistle; very drunk. [Slang.]

He was indeed, according to the vulgar phrase, whistle-drunk; for, before he had swallowed the third bottle he became so entirely overpowered that, though he was not carried off to bed till long after, the parson considered him as absent. Fielding, Tom Jones, xii. 2. (Davies.) whistle-duck (hwis'l-duk), n. 1. Same as whistler, 1 (c).—2. Same as whistlewing.

whistle-fish (hwis'l-fish), n. A rockling; specifically, the three-bearded rockling: same as sea-loach. Also weasel-fish.

I believe . . . that, while preserving the sound of the name, the term has been changed, and a very different word substituted, and that for whistle-fish we ought to read weasel-fish. Both the Three and Five-bearded Rocklings were called mustela from the days of Pliny to those of Rondelet, and thence to the present time.
Yarrell, British Fishes, II. 272.

★whistler (hwis'lėr), n. [< ME. whistlere, hwistlere, < AS. hwistlere, a whistler, piper, < hwistlian, whistle: see whistle.] 1. One who or that which whistles.

One guinea, to be conferred upon the ablest whistler.
Strutt, Sports and Pastimes, p. 474.

Specifically—(a) The hoary marmot, Arctomys pruinosus, a large marmot found in northerly and western mountainous parts of North America, related to the woodchuck: a translation of the Canadian French name siffleur. (b) The whistlewing. [U. S.] (c) The widgeon, Mareca penelope (see whew-duck). (d) The ring-ouzel, Merula torquata. See cut under ouzel, 2. [Local, Eng.] (e) The green plover or lapwing; the pewit.

Whistler (Arctomys pruinosus).

The screech-owl, and the whistler shrill. Webster.

2. A broken-winded horse; a roarer.

The latter of whom is spoken of as a non-stayer and a whistler. The Field, Aug. 27, 1887. (Encyc. Dict.)

3†. A piper; one who plays on the pipes. Piers Plowman (B), xv. 475.—4. The keeper of a shebeen, or unlicensed spirit-shop. [Slang.]

The turnkeys knows beforehand, and gives the word to the whistlers, and you may wistle for it wen you go to look.
Dickens, Pickwick, xlv.

whistlewing (hwis'l-wing), n. The golden-eyed duck, Clangula glaucion. Also whistle-duck, whistling duck.

whistle-wood (hwis'l-wůd), n. The striped maple, Acer Pennsylvanicum, thus named because used by boys to make whistles, the bark easily separating from a section of the stem in spring. The name is also given to the basswood, Tilia Americana, having the same property, and in Great Britain is locally applied to the mountain-ash, Sorbus Aucuparia, and to the common and sycamore maples, Acer campestre and A. Pseudo-platanus.

whistling (hwis'ling), p. a. Sounding like a whistle: as, a whistling sound.

whistling-arrow (hwis'ling-ar″ō), n. An arrow whose head was so formed that the air rushing through it in its flight produced a whistling sound: a toy in use in the sixteenth century.

whistling-buoy (hwis'ling-boi), n. See buoy, 1 (with cut).

whistlingly (hwis'ling-li), adv. In a whistling manner; with a sibilant or shrill sound. Stormonth.

whistling-shop (hwis'ling-shop), n. A spirit-shop, especially a secret and illicit one. In the quotation, the place referred to is a room in a prison for debtors where spirits are sold secretly. [Slang.]

"Bless your heart, no, sir," replied Job; "a whistling-shop, sir, is where they sell spirits."
Dickens, Pickwick, xlv.

whistly† (hwist'li), adv. [< whist[1] + -ly[2]. Cf. wistly.] Silently.

whist-play (hwist'plā), n. Play in the game of whist.

The fact is that all rules of whist-play depend upon and are referable to general principles.
Encyc. Brit., XXIV. 544.

whist-player (hwist'plā″ėr), n. One who plays whist.

About 1830 some of the best French whist-players, with Deschapelles at their head, modified and improved the old-fashioned system. Encyc. Brit., XXIV. 544.

whit[1] (hwit), n. [A var. of wit,* a var. of wight, < ME. wigt, wiht, sometimes with, < AS. wiht: see wight[1]. The change of initial w- to wh- is perhaps due in this case to emphasis (so want[1] is sometimes pronounced emphatically whont). The notion that whit is derived by metathesis from AS. wiht is erroneous.] The smallest part, particle, bit, or degree; a little; a jot, tittle, or iota: often used adverbially, and generally with a negative.

A meruelous case, that Ientlemen should so be ashamed of good learning, and neuer a whit ashamed of ill maners.
Ascham, The Scholemaster, p. 60.

Nor is the freedom of the will of God any whit abated, let, or hindered. Hooker, Eccles. Polity, i. 2.

And Samuel told him every whit. 1 Sam. iii. 18.

Are ye angry at me, because I have made a man every whit whole on the Sabbath day? John vii. 23.

But all your threats I do not fear,
Nor yet regard one whit.
The Cruel Black (Child's Ballads, III. 376).

Why, man, you don't seem one whit the happier at this.
Sheridan, The Rivals, iv. 3.

whit[2] (hwit), a. An obsolete or dialectal form (surviving especially in old compounds, as whit-leather, Whitsun, etc.) of white[1].

whit-bee (hwit'bē), n. See Portland stone, under stone.

★white[1] (hwīt), a. and n. [< ME. whit, whyt, qvit, hwit, < AS. hwit = OS. hwīt = OFries. hwīt = D. wit = LG. wit = OHG. [Eng.]—White wren, yam, etc. See the nouns. = Syn. 2. White, Fair, Blond, Clear. As to complexion, white expresses that which has too little color for naturalness or health; that is fair which agreeably approaches white; that is clear which is free from blotch; there is a clear brown or olive as well as a clear blond. Blond is fair in distinctive application to the color of the human skin—properly to that of females.

White Perch (Morone americana).

II. n. [< ME. hwite, the white, whiteness, fairness; cf. OHG. wîzî, Icel. hviti.] 1. A highly luminous color, devoid of chroma, and therefore indeterminate in hue. But a white intensely illuminated has a yellow effect, and very deeply shaded takes on the bluish look of gray. A derangement of the proportions of light in pure white to the extent of 3 per cent. of the red, 6 per cent. of the green, or .5 per cent. of the blue, is readily perceived by direct comparison; but quite considerable admixtures of chroma are compatible with the color's retaining the name of white.

2. A pigment of this color.—3. Something, or a part of something, having the color of snow. Specifically—(a) In archery: (1†) The central part in the butt, which was formerly painted white; the center or mark at which an arrow or other missile is aimed; hence, the thing or point aimed at. See clout, 4 (a).

> Vertue is the white we shoote at, not vanitie.
> Lyly, Euphues and his England, p. 245.

(2) The fifth and outermost circle of the target, which is colored white: see target. (3) An arrow which hits the outermost circle; a hit in the white: such a hit counts 1 by the present method of scoring. Sometimes the third circle is also colored white instead of blue, and the two white circles are then distinguished as outer white and inner white. A hit in the inner white counts 5 by the present method of scoring.

(b) The albumen of an egg, or that pellucid viscous fluid which surrounds the yolk; also, sometimes, the corresponding part of a seed, or the farinaceous matter surrounding the embryo. (c) That part of the ball of the eye which surrounds the iris or colored part.

It is small-bodied, but a foot or more long owing to the development of the tail.—White-backed skunk, the conepate. See cut under Conepatus.—White-backed woodpecker, a three-toed woodpecker of North America, Picoides dorsalis of Baird, having a long white ★stripe down the middle of the black back.

whitebait (hwīt'bāt), n. 1. A small clupeoid fish, prized as a delicacy in England. Whitebait are best when from 2 or 3 inches long, but retain the name up to a size of 4 or 5 inches. They abound in the estuary of the Thames and in other similar British localities at certain seasons. The fishing begins in April, and lasts through the summer; the fishes are taken in bag-nets. They are chiefly of a silvery-white color inclining to a pale-greenish on the back. Some places in England, as especially Greenwich, are famous for their whitebait dinners. The fish are usually fried till they are crisp. The identity of whitebait has been much discussed and disputed. They have been supposed to be a distinct species, named Clupea alba, and even placed in a genus framed for their reception as Rogenia alba. They have been more generally recognized as the fry of certain clupeoids, as the sprat (Clupea sprattus), the herring (C. harengus), and the shad (of one or another of the British species). But careful examinations of great quantities of whitebait, made in different localities at different times, have shown these opinions to be more or less erroneous. Whitebait consists in fact of the fry of several different clupeoid fishes, mainly the sprat and the herring, with occasionally a small percentage of yet other fishes; and the relative quantity of the different species represented varies, moreover, according to season and locality.

Our wives (without whose sanction no good man would surely ever look a whitebait in the face) gave us permission to attend this entertainment. Thackeray, Philip, xl.

2. A Chinese salmonoid fish, Salanx sinensis. See Salanx.

2. [cap.] A member of an illegal agrarian association formed in Ireland about the year 1761, whose object was "to do justice to the poor by restoring the ancient commons and redressing other grievances" (Lecky). The members of the association assembled at night with white frocks over their other clothes (whence the name), threw down fences, and leveled inclosures (being hence also called Levelers), destroyed the property of harsh landlords or their agents, the Protestant clergy, the tithe-collectors, and any others who had made themselves obnoxious to the association. Also used attributively.

Unlike ordinary crime, the White-boy outrages were systematically, skilfully, and often very successfully directed to the enforcement of certain rules of conduct.
Lecky, Eng. in 18th Cent., xvi.

Whiteboyism (hwīt'boi-izm), n. [< Whiteboy + -ism.] The principles or practices of the Whiteboys.

The Catholic bishop of Cloyne, in March, 1762, issued a pastoral urging those of his diocese to use all the spiritual censures at their disposal for the purpose of repressing Whiteboyism. Lecky, Eng. in 18th Cent., xvi.

white-brass (hwīt'brȧs), n. An alloy of copper and zinc, in which the proportion of copper is comparatively small. With less than 45 per cent. of copper the color of brass ceases to be yellow, and as the percentage of zinc is increased the color of the alloy passes from silver-white to gray and bluish-gray. Such alloys are brittle, and have but a limited use. Some of these white-brasses are sold under the trade-names of "Birmingham platinum" and "platinum lead." These are chiefly used for buttons, which are made by first casting and then carefully pressing so as to bring out the ornamental pattern on the surface.

white-breasted (hwīt'bres″ted), a. 1. Having a white breast or bosom.

White-breasted like a star
Fronting the dawn he moved. Tennyson, Œnone.

2. Having the breast more or less white: specifying numerous animals. See cut under squirrel-hawk.

Also called white-mouthed snail.

white-listed (hwīt'lis″ted), a. Having white stripes or lists on a darker ground (the tree in the quotation having been torn with lightning).

He raised his eyes and saw
The tree that shone white-listed thro' the gloom.
Tennyson, Merlin and Vivien.

white-livered (hwīt'liv″ėrd), a. Having (according to an old notion) a light-colored liver, supposed to be due to lack of bile or gall, and hence a pale look—an indication of cowardice; hence, cowardly.

For Bardolph, he is white-livered and red-faced; by the means whereof a' faces it out, but fights not.
Shak., Hen. V., iii. 2. 34.

As I live, they stay not here, white-liver'd wretches!
Fletcher (and another), Elder Brother, iv. 3.

When they come in swaggering company, and will pocket up anything, may they not properly be said to be white-livered? B. Jonson, Cynthia's Revels, iv. 1.

whitely† (hwīt'li), a. [< white[1] + -ly[1].] White; pale.

A whitly wanton, with a velvet brow.
Shak., L. L. L., iii. 1. 198 (folio 1623).

Could I those whitely Stars go nigh
Which make the Milky-Way in Sky.
Howell, Letters, ii. 22 (song).

white-marked (hwīt'märkt), a. Marked with white, as various animals.—White-marked moth, Tæniocampa leucographa, a British noctuid.—White-marked tussock-moth, a common North American vaporer, Hemerocampa leucostigma. See tussock-moth, and cut under Orgyia, 2.

white-meat (hwīt'mēt), n. [< ME. whitmete; < white[1] + meat.] See white meat, under white[1].

white-mouthed (hwīt'mouthd), a. In conch., white-lipped.

whiten (hwī'tn), v. [< ME. hwitnen = Icel. hvītna = Sw. hvitna = Dan. hvidne, whiten, become white; as white[1] + -en[1].] I. intrans. To become white; turn white; bleach: as, the sea whitens with foam.

Whiten gan the orisounte sheene
Al esterward, as it is wont to done.
Chaucer, Troïlus, v. 276.

Willows whiten, aspens quiver.
Tennyson, Lady of Shalott.

Fields like prairies, snow-patched, as far as you could see, with things laid out to whiten!
Mrs. Whitney, Leslie Goldthwaite, vi.

II. trans. To make white; bleach; blanch; whitewash: as, to whiten cloth; to whiten a wall.

Drooping lilies whitened all the ground.
Addison, tr. of Virgil's Georgics, iv.

It [the mastic] is chewed only by the Turks, especially the ladies, who use it both as an amusement and also to whiten their teeth and sweeten the breath.
Pococke, Description of the East, II. ii. 4.

The walls of Churches and rich Mens Houses are whitened with Lime, both within and without.
Dampier, Voyages, I. 140.

=Syn. Whiten, Bleach, Blanch, Etiolate. Whiten may be a general word for making white, but is chiefly used for the putting of a white coating upon a surface: as, a wall whitened by the application of lime; the sea whitened by the wind. White for whiten is old-fashioned or Biblical. Bleach and blanch express the act of making white by removal, change, or destruction of color. Bleaching is done chemically or by exposure to light and air: as, to bleach linen or bones. Blanching is a natural process: celery and other plants are blanched or etiolated by excluding light from them; cheeks are blanched by fear, when the blood retires from their capillaries and leaves them pale. See also defs. 5 and 6 under blanch.

white-necked (hwīt'nekt), a. Having a white neck: specifying various animals: as, the white-necked raven, Corvus cryptoleucus, a small raven found in western parts of the United States, having the concealed bases of the feathers of the neck fleecy-white; the white-necked or chaplain crow, Corvus scapulatus; the white-necked otary, an Australian eared seal.

whitener (hwīt'nėr), n. [< whiten + -er[1].] One who or that which bleaches, or makes white; especially, some chemical or other agent used for bleaching or cleaning very perfectly.

whiteness (hwīt'nes), n. [< ME. whytnesse, whitnesse; < white[1] + -ness.] 1. The state of being white; white color, or freedom from any darkness or obscurity on the surface.

Says Al Kittib, they [the Moors] displayed teeth of dazzling whiteness, and their breath was as the perfume of flowers. Irving, Granada, i.

2. Lack of color in the face; paleness, as from sickness, terror, or grief; pallor.

Thou tremblest; and the whiteness in thy cheek
Is apter than thy tongue to tell thy errand.
Shak., 2 Hen. IV., i. 1. 68.

3. Purity; cleanness; freedom from stain or blemish.

I am she,
And so will bear myself, whose truth and whiteness
Shall ever stand as far from these detections
As you from duty.
Beau. and Fl., Thierry and Theodoret, i. 1.

He had kept
The whiteness of his soul, and thus men o'er him wept.
Byron, Childe Harold, iii. 57.

whitening (hwīt'ning), n. [Verbal n. of whiten, v.] 1. The act or process of making white.—2. In leather-manuf., the operation of cleaning and preparing the flesh side of a hide on a beam, preparatory to waxing.—3. Tin-plating. See chemical plating, under plate, v. t.—4. Same as whiting[1].

Three bright shillings, . . . which Peggotty had evidently polished up with whitening.
Dickens, David Copperfield, v.

whitening-slicker (hwīt'ning-slik″ėr), n. A kind of scraper or knife with a very fine edge, used by leather-dressers in whitening or cleaning the flesh side of skins before waxing.

whitening-stone (hwīt'ning-stōn), n. A fine sharpening stone used by cutlers.

white-pot (hwīt'pot), n. 1. A dish made of milk or cream, eggs, sugar, bread or rice, and sometimes fruit, spices, etc., baked in a pot or in a bowl placed in a quick oven. Older recipes differ as to the ingredients, but in its more frequent forms the dish is of the nature of a rice- or bread-pudding.

To make a white-pot. Take a pint and a half of cream, a quarter of a pound of sugar, a little rose-water, a few dates sliced, a few raisins of the sun, six or seven eggs, and a little mace, a sliced pippin, or lemon, cut sippet fashion for your dishes you bake in, and dip them in sack or rose-water. Gentlewoman's Delight (1676).

When I show you the library, you shall see in her own hand . . . the best receipt now in England both for a hasty-pudding and a white-pot. Steele, Spectator, No. 109.

But white-pot thick is my Buxoma's fare.
While she loves white-pot, capon ne'er shall be,
Nor hare, nor beef, nor pudding, food for me.
Gay, Shepherd's Week, Monday, l. 92.

2†. A drink consisting of port wine heated, with a roasted lemon, sugar, and spices added. N. and Q., 7th ser., VII. 218.

white-pudding (hwīt'půd″ing), n. 1. A pudding made of milk, eggs, flour, and butter.—2. A kind of sausage of oatmeal mixed with suet, seasoned with pepper, salt, and sometimes onions, and stuffed into a prepared intestine. Compare black-pudding.

white-rock (hwīt'rok), n. In the South Staffordshire coal-field, dikes of diabasic rock which there intersect the coal-measures.

Microscopical examination shows that this white-rock or "white-trap" is merely an altered form of some diabasic or basaltic rock, wherein the felspar crystals, though much decayed, can yet be traced, the augite, olivine, and magnetite being more or less completely changed into a mere pulverulent earthy substance.
Geikie, Text-Book of Geol., 2d ed., p. 560.

white-root† (hwīt'rōt), n. The Solomon's-seal, Polygonatum multiflorum, or perhaps P. officinale.

white-rot (hwīt'rot), n. See rot.

whiterump (hwīt'rump), n. 1. Same as whitetail, 1.—2. The Hudsonian godwit, Limosa hæmastica: same as spotrump. G. Trumbull, 1888. [West Barnstable, Mass.]

white-rumped (hwīt'rumpt), a. Having a white rump or white upper tail-coverts: specifying various birds.—White-rumped petrel, Leach's petrel, Cymochorea leucorrhoa, of a fuliginous color with white upper tail-coverts: found on both east and west coasts of the United States.—White-rumped sandpiper, Bonaparte's sandpiper, Tringa or Actodromas bonapartei, having white upper tail-coverts: abundant in many parts of North America.—White-rumped shrike, the common American shrike, a variety of the loggerhead, Lanius ludovicianus excubitoroides.—White-rumped thrush. See thrush[1].

white-salted (hwīt'sâl″ted), a. Cured in a certain manner, as herring (which see).—White-salted herring. See herring.

white-scop (hwīt'skop), n. Same as whitehead, 1. G. Trumbull, 1888. [Local, Connecticut.]

white-shafted (hwīt'shâf″ted), a. Having white shafts or shaft-lines of the feathers: as, the white-shafted fantail, Rhipidura albiscapa. Compare red-shafted, yellow-shafted.

whiteside (hwīt'sīd), n. The golden-eyed duck, Clangula glaucion. [Westmoreland, Eng.]

white-sided (hwīt'sī″ded), a. Having the sides white, or having white on the sides: as, the white-sided dolphin, or skunk-porpoise. See cut under Lagenorhynchus.

whitesmith (hwīt'smith), n. [< white[1] + smith. Cf. blacksmith.] 1. A worker in tinware.—2. A worker in iron who finishes or polishes the work, in distinction from one who forges it.

whitespot (hwīt'spot), n. 1. A British noctuid moth, Dianthœcia albimaculata.—2. Another British moth, Ennychia octomaculata.

white-spotted (hwīt'spot″ed), a. Spotted with white: as, the white-spotted pinion, Cosmia diffinis, a British noctuid; the white-spotted pug, Eupithecia albopunctata, a British geometrid moth.

whitespur (hwīt'spėr), n. In her., a title given to a certain class of esquires, from the spurs which they wore at their creation. Also called esquires' whitespurs.

whitester, whitster (hwīt'stėr, hwit'stėr), n. [Early mod. E. whytstare, wytstare, whitstarre, < ME. whitstare; < white[1] + -ster.] A bleacher; a whitener. [Obsolete or local.]

Carry it among the whitsters in Datchet-mead.
Shak., M. W. of W., iii. 3. 14.

White's thrush. A ground-thrush, Geocichla (Oreocincla) varia. This bird was originally described as Turdus varius by Pallas, 1811; as T. aureus by Holandre, 1828; and as T. whitei by Eyton, 1836, when it was found as a straggler to Great Britain, and dedicated to G. White of Selborne; it is also known as Oreocincla aurea, O. whitei, and by other names. By some singular misapprehension White's thrush has been said to be "the only known bird which is found in Europe and America and Australia alike"—the facts being (1) that various birds are so found, but no thrushes of any kind are so found; (2) that White's thrush has never been found either in America or in Australia, and has been found in Europe as an accidental visitant only, its habitat being as given under ground-thrush (which see); (3) that the supposed White's thrush of Australia is G. lunulata (Turdus lunulatus of Latham), and the true White's thrush, occurring as a straggler in Europe, was mistakenly recorded as Turdus lunulatus by Blasius in 1862: whence a part of the myth, which in its rounded-out form extended to America.

whitestone (hwīt'stōn), n. A literal translation of the German Weissstein, the name of a rock now generally known as granulite, but sometimes called leptinite. The name Weissstein is now obsolete in Germany, and whitestone has very rarely been used by English writers on lithology.

whitetail (hwīt'tāl), n. [Formerly also whittail; < white + tail. Cf. whiterump, wheatear.] 1. The wheatear or stonechat, Saxicola œnanthe. Also whiterump, white-arse, wittol, etc. See cut under wheatear.—2. A humming-bird of the genus Urochroa (which see, with cut).—3. The white-tailed deer of North America, Odocoileus americanus: in distinction from the blacktail (O. macrotis). See white-tailed deer (under white-tailed), and cut under Cariacus.

white-tailed (hwīt'tāld), a. Having the tail more or less completely white: noting various birds and other animals.—White-tailed buzzard, Buteo albocaudatus, a fine large hawk of Texas and southward, having the tail and its coverts white with broad black subterminal zone, and many fine zigzag blackish lines.—White-tailed deer, the commonest deer of North America, Odocoileus americanus; the whitetail. The tail is very long and broad, of a flattened lanceolate shape, and on the upper side concolor with the back; but it is pure-white underneath, and very conspicuous when hoisted in flight. See cut under Cariacus.—White-tailed eagle, Haliaëtus albicilla, the common sea-eagle or ern of Europe, etc.—White-tailed emerald, Elvira chionura, a small humming-bird, 3½ inches long, chiefly green, but with the crissal and tail feathers white, the latter tipped with black. This species inhabits the United States of Colombia (Veragua) and Costa Rica. A second is E. cupreiceps, little different. The feature named is unusual in this family. Compare Urochroa (with cut) and Urosticte.

White-tailed Emerald (Elvira chionura).

—White-tailed gnu, Catoblepas gnu, the common gnu, in distinction from C. gorgon, whose tail is black. See cut under gnu.—White-tailed godwit, Limosa uropygialis, a species widely distributed, closely resembling the bar-tailed godwit.—White-tailed kite, the black-shouldered kite of the United States, Elanus leucurus. See cut under kite.—White-tailed longspur, the black-shouldered or chestnut-collared longspur, Centrophanes ornatus, a very common fringilline bird of the western parts of North America.—White-tailed marlin. See marlin (b).—White-tailed mole, Talpa leucura, an Indian species.—White-tailed ptarmigan, Lagopus leucurus, a ptarmigan peculiar to the Rocky Mountain region of North America, in winter pure-white all over, including the tail, contrary to the rule in this genus. The nearest approach to this condition is found in L. hemileucurus of Spitzbergen.

Then said, I must speak to the people a little,
But I'll see you all damn'd before I will whittle.
Swift, Clever Tom Clinch.

Whittleseya (hwit'l-si-ä), n. [Named after C. Whittlesey (see def.).] The generic name of a plant first found by Charles Whittlesey in the coal-measures at Cuyahoga Falls, Ohio, and named by J. S. Newberry in honor of its discoverer (1853). This plant is known only by its leaves, of which the nervation is very peculiar, excluding it from all other known genera. The generic characters, as given by Lesquereux, are—"frond simple or pinnate, nerves fasciculate, confluent to the base, not dichotomous, fructification unknown." The leaves are somewhat fan-like in shape—truncate, and dentate or crenulate at the upper border, but entire on the sides and rapidly narrowing into a short petiole. This plant, of which the nervation has some analogy with that of the gingko, was placed by Lesquereux with the Nœggarathieæ; but it is now generally regarded as belonging to the Ginkgoales. Whittleseya has been found in various localities, always low down in the coal-measures.

whittle-shawl (hwit'l-shâl), n. Same as whittle[1].

whittlings (hwit'lingz), n. pl. Chips or bits produced in whittling.

God, in the whizzing of a pleasant wind,
Shall march upon the tops of mulberry trees,
To cool all breasts that burn with any griefs,
As whilom he was good to Moyses' men.
Peele, David and Bethsabe.

The exhalations whizzing in the air
Give so much light that I may read by them.
Shak., J. C., ii. 1. 44.

2. To move, rush, or fly with a sibilant humming sound.

In certain special uses who appears—(a) Inquiring as to the character, origin, or status of a person: as, who is this man? (that is, what are his antecedents, his social standing, etc.); who are we (what sort of persons are we) that we should condemn him?

Who art thou that judgest another man's servant? to his own master he standeth or falleth. Rom. xiv. 4.

Please to know me likewise. Who am I?
Why, one, sir, who is lodging with a friend
Three streets off. Browning, Fra Lippo Lippi.

Mr. Talboys inquired, "Who were these people?" "O, only two humble neighbors," was the reply.
C. Reade, Love Me Little, iii.

(b) In exclamatory sentences, interrogative in form but expecting or admitting no reply: as, who would ever have suspected it!

Our heir-apparent is a king!
Who dream'd, who thought of such a thing?
Shak., Pericles, iii., Prol., l. 38.

B. rel. Introducing a dependent clause, and noting as antecedent a subject, object, or other factor, expressed or understood, in a clause actually or logically preceding. (a) With reference to the clause following, the relative may introduce—(1) A subordinate proposition explanatory or restrictive of the antecedent.

Ydolatrie thus was boren,
For quuam mani man is for-loren.
Genesis and Exodus (E. E. T. S.), l. 696.

He nadde bote a dogter ho mygte ys eir be.

Steele, Tatler, No. 206.

Grant me still a friend in my retreat,
Whom I may whisper—solitude is sweet.
Cowper, Retirement, l. 742.

The antecedent is sometimes omitted, being implied in the pronoun, which is in this case usually called a compound relative.

Adraweth 3oure suerdes & loke wo may do best.
Rob. of Gloucester, l. 127 (Morris and Skeat, II. 6).

Ac hi casten heore lot hwes he [Christ's garment] scolde beo. Old Eng. Misc. (ed. Morris), p. 50.

Now tell me who made the world.
Marlowe, Faustus, ii. 2.

The dead man's knell

Shak., Macbeth, iv. 3. 171.

There be who can relate his domestic life to the exactness of a diary. Milton, Eikonoklastes, xxvii.

Her we ask'd of that and this,
And who were tutors. Tennyson, Princess, i.

(2) A clause dependent in form, but adding a distinct idea. Here the relative force is almost entirely lost, who becoming equivalent to and with a demonstrative pronoun.

He trod the water,
Whose enmity he flung aside.
Shak., Tempest, ii. 1. 116.

The yong man . . . at last married her, to whose wedding, amongst other guests, came Apollonius, who . . . found her out to be a Serpent, a Lamia.
Burton, Anat. of Mel., p. 438.

(b) With reference to gender, who originally noted a masculine or feminine antecedent, whether human, animate, or other, the neuter being what; and whose, the possessive (genitive) of who, was also that of what, and is still correctly used of a neuter antecedent (see what[1]). Moreover, before the appearance of the possessive its, whose place was filled by the neuter his (see he[1], I., C. (b)), not only were neuter objects designated in the two other cases by he and him, but who and whom were sometimes substituted for that as the nominative and objective of the neuter relative (see the quotation from Puttenham). In modern use, however, who and whom are applied regularly to persons, frequently to animals, and sometimes even to inanimate things when represented with some of the attributes of humanity, as in personification or vivid description.

Men seyn over the walle stonde
Grete engynes, who were nygh honde.
Rom. of the Rose, l. 4194.

The nature and condition of man . . . is called humanitie; whiche is a generall name to those vertues in whome semeth to be a mutuall concorde and loue in the nature of man. Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, ii. 8.

George Eliot, Adam Bede, vi.

And you, ye stars,
Who slowly begin to marshal,
As of old, in the fields of heaven,
Your distant, melancholy lines!
M. Arnold, Empedocles on Etna, ii.

(c) With reference to the nature of its antecedent, who may note—(1) a particular or determinate person or thing (see (a)); or (2) an indefinite antecedent, in which case who has the force of whoso, whosoever, or whoever, and is called an indefinite relative. Its antecedent may be expressed, or it may be a compound relative.

Hwam ich biteche that bred that ich on wyne wete,

And dame Musyke commaunded curteysly
La Bell Pucell wyth me than to daunce, Whome that I toke wyth all my plesaunce.
Hawes, Pastime of Pleasure (Percy Soc.), p. 70.

=Syn. Who, which, and that agree in being relatives, and are more or less interchangeable as such; but who is used chiefly of persons (though also often of the higher animals), which almost only of animals and things (in old English also of persons), and that indifferently of either, except after a preposition, where only who or which can stand. Some recent authorities teach that only that should be used when the relative clause is limiting or defining: as, the man that runs fastest wins the race; but who or which when it is descriptive or coördinating: as, this man, who ran fastest, won the race; but, though present usage is perhaps tending in the direction of such a distinction, it neither has been nor is a rule of English speech, nor is it likely to become one, especially on account of the impossibility of setting that after a preposition; for to turn all relative clauses into the form "the house that Jack lived in" (instead of "the house in which Jack lived") would be intolerable. In good punctuation the defining relative is distinguished (as in the examples above), by never taking a comma before it, whether it be who or which or that. Wherever that could be properly used, but only there, the relative may be, and very often is, omitted altogether: thus, the house Jack built or lived in; the man (or the purpose) he built it for. The adjective clause introduced by a relative may qualify a noun in any way in which an adjective or adjective phrase, either attributive or appositional, can qualify it, and has sometimes a pregnant implication of one or another kind: as, why punish this man, who is innocent? i. e. seeing, or although, he is innocent (= this innocent man). But a relative is also not rarely made use of to add a coördinate statement, being equivalent to and with a following pronoun: as, I studied geometry, which I found difficult (and [I] found it difficult); I met a friend, who kindly showed me the way (and he kindly, etc.). This way of employing the relative is by some regarded as a Latinism, and condemned; it is restricted to who and which.

whoa (hwō), interj. [A var. of ho[1].] Stop! stand still!

Come, Ile go teach ye hayte and ree, gee and whoe, and which is to which hand.
Heywood, Fortune by Land and Sea (Works, ed. 1874, [VI. 384).

G. heil, sound, whole, saved, = Icel. heill = Sw. hel = Dan. heel = Goth. hails, hale, whole, = OBulg. cielŭ, whole, complete; perhaps allied to Gr. καλός, excellent, good, hale, and Skt. kalya, hale, healthy (> kalyāna, prosperous, blessed). From whole (AS. hāl) are also ult. E. wholesome, wholesale, wholly, heal[1], health, healthy, and the second element of wassail; from the Scand. form (Icel. heill) are ult. E. hale[2], hail[2], etc. The change of initial ho- to who- was a dial. peculiarity, there being an actual change of pronunciation (hō to hwō), due to the labializing effect of the long ō; the change was reflected in the spelling, which in some words, as whole, whoop, whore, whot, came into literary use, while the orig. pronunciation with simple h remained or prevailed. In dial. use the who- (hwo-) thus developed was afterward reduced in some districts to wo-, as wot for whot (orig. whote) for hot (orig. hote). Whole is one of the words which the American Philological Association and the English Philological Society include in their list of spellings to be amended, recommending the restoration of the old form hole, in keeping with the derived or related holy, heal[1], hale[2], etc. (Trans. Amer. Philol. Ass., 1886, p. 127).] I. a. 1. Hale; healthy; sound; strong; well.

whore (hōr), n. [With unorig. w, as in whole, etc.; < ME. hore, a harlot (not in AS.), < Icel. hōra, adulteress, = Sw. hora = Dan. hore = D. hoer = OHG. huora, huorra, MHG. huore, G. hure (Goth. hōr, f., not found, another word, kalki, being used); also in masc. form, Icel. hōrr = Goth. hōrs, adulterer; cf. AS. hōr*, adultery (in comp. hōrcwēn, adulteress), < Icel. hōr = Sw. Dan. hor = OHG. huor, adultery; cf. MHG. herge, f., a prostitute; OBulg. kurŭva = Pol. kurwa = Lith. kurva, adulteress (perhaps < Teut.). Some compare Ir. caraim, love, cara, friend, L. cārus, dear, orig. loving (see caress), Skt. chāru, agreeable, beautiful, etc. The word was confused or homiletically associated in early ME. with ME. hore, < AS. horu (horw-) = OS. horu, horo = OFries. hore = OHG. horo, filth, dirt. By some modern writers it has been erroneously derived from hire[1], as if 'one hired,' the notion really present in the equiv. L. meretrix, a prostitute (see meretrix). The vowel in this word was orig. long, and the reg. mod. form would be hoor* (hör), the pron. hōr instead of hör (as given by Walker beside hōr) is prob. due to the confusion with the ME. hore, filth, and to the later confusion of the initial ho- with who-, as also in whole. The word, with its derivatives, is now avoided in polite speech; its survival in literature, so far as it survives, is due to the fact that it is a favorite word with Shakspere (who uses it, with its derivatives, 99 times) and is common in the authorized English version of the Bible. The word in all its forms (whoredom, etc.) is generally retained in the revised version of the Old Testament, though the American revisers recommended the substitution of harlot, as less gross; in the revised version of the New Testament harlot (with fornicator for whoremonger, etc.) is substituted.] A woman who prostitutes her body for hire; a prostitute; a harlot; a courtezan; a strumpet; hence, in abuse, any unchaste woman; an adulteress or fornicatress. [Now only in low use.]

Do not marry me to a whore. Shak., M. for M., v. 1. 521.

Hee wooed her and sued her his mistress to bee,
And offered rich presents to Mary Ambree. . . .
"A mayden of England, sir, never will bee
The whore of a monarcke," quoth Mary Ambree.
Mary Ambree (Child's Ballads, VII. 113).

Thou know'st my Wrongs, and with what pain I wear
The Name of Whore his Preachment on me pinn'd.
J. Beaumont, Psyche, iii. 184.

whore (hōr), v.; pret. and pp. whored, ppr. whoring. [= G. huren = Sw. hora = Dan. hore; cf. D. hoereren; from the noun.] I. intrans. To prostitute one's body for hire; in general, to practise lewdness. Shak., Othello, v. 1. 116. [Low.]

II. trans. To corrupt by lewd intercourse. [Low.]

He that hath kill'd my king and whored my mother.

J. Udall, On 2 Pet.

whore's-bird† (hōrz′bėrd), n. A low term of abuse.

They'd set some sturdy whore's-bird to meet me, and beat out ha'f a dozen of my teeth.
Plautus made English (1694), p. 9. (Davies.)

Damn you altogether for a pack of whores'-birds as you are. Graves, Spiritual Quixote, iv. 9. (Davies.) whore's-egg (hōrz′eg), n. A sea-urchin.

whoreson† (hōr′sun), n. and a. [Early mod. E. also horeson, horson; < whore + son.] I. n. A bastard: used generally in contempt, or in coarse familiarity, and without exactness of meaning. [Low.]

Well said; a merry whoreson, ha!
Shak., R. and J., iv. 4. 19.

Frog was a sly whoreson, the reverse of John.
Arbuthnot, Hist. John Bull.

II. a. Bastard-like; mean; scurvy: used in contempt, or in coarse familiarity, and applied to persons or things.

A whoreson cold, sir, a cough, sir.
Shak., 2 Hen. IV., iii. 2. 193.

The whoreson rich innkeeper of Doncaster, her father, shewed himself a rank ostler to send her up at this time a year, and by the carrier too.
Dekker and Webster, Northward Ho, ii. 2.

whorish (hōr′ish), a. [< whore + -ish[1].] Of or pertaining to whores; having the character of a whore; lewd; unchaste. Shak., T. and C., iv. 1. 63. [Low.]

whorishly (hōr′ish-li), adv. In a whorish or lewd manner. [Low.]

whorishness (hōr′ish-nes), n. The character ★of being whorish. [Low.]

whorl (hwėrl or hwôrl), n. [< late ME. whorle, contr. of whorvel, whorwhil, whorwil;* cf. OD. worvel, a spindle, whirl, etc.: see whirl, and cf. wharl[1].] 1. In bot., a ring of organs all from the same node; a verticil. Every complete flower is externally formed of two whorls of leaves, constituting the floral envelop, or perianth; and internally of two or more other whorls of organs, constituting the organs of fructification. The term whorl by itself is generally applied to a circle of radiating leaves—an arrangement of more than two leaves around a common center, upon the same plane with one another. Also whirl. See cuts under Lavandula and Paris.

2. In conch., one of the turns of a spiral shell; a volution; a gyre. The last whorl, opposite the apex or nucleus, and including the aperture of the shell, is commonly distinguished as the body-whorl. See spire[2], n., 2 (with cut), and cuts under univalve, Pleurotomaria, and Scalaria. Also whirl.

Whorls of Ammonites rothomagensis.

Widmannstättian (wid-man-stet′i-ạn), a. Pertaining to Aloys Beck von Widmannstätt, of Vienna (1753–1849).—Widmannstättian figures, the name given to certain peculiar markings seen on the polished surfaces of many meteoric irons (siderites) when these have been acted on by an acid. They were first noticed by Widmannstätt in 1808, on the Agram meteorite. The general appearance of these markings may be learned from the annexed figure, which is a copy of a photograph, of natural size, of a part of an etched section of the Laurens county (South Carolina) meteoric iron. The Widmannstättian figures are sections of planes of cleavage or of crystalline growth, along which segregation, or chemical change of some sort, has taken place, and whose form and position with reference to each other are in accordance with the laws governing the development of crystalline substances belonging to the isometric system. Reichenbach divided these figures into what he called a trias (more properly a triad)—namely, kamacite (Balkeneisen), tænite (Bandeisen), and plessite (Füll-eisen)—the first consisting, so far as has been as yet made out, of distinct plates of iron, with a comparatively small percentage of nickel; the second consisting of thinner plates enveloping the kamacite, and richer in nickel; and the third being a sort of ground-mass filling the cavities, and having less obvious indications of structure and generally a darker color than the others. It has frequently been stated that some meteoric irons do not exhibit the Widmannstättian figures, and that consequently their absence is not a proof of non-celestial origin; it is certain, however, that few, if any, siderites do not show traces of some kind of structure, although investigators in this branch of science are by no means agreed as to what kind of figures are properly designated by the name Widmannstättian. A somewhat similar uncertainty prevails with regard to the figures developed by etching on the terrestrial iron of Ovifak; so that, at the present time, it cannot be said that the Widmannstättian figures furnish a positive criterion by which the authenticity of a meteoric iron may be established; yet it is certain that well-developed figures of this kind do render it highly probable that the specimen in which they are seen is extraterrestrial. A classification of meteoric irons on the basis of their crystalline structure, as revealed by the figures developed by etching, is commonly adopted at the present time; the subject, however, is not free from difficulties.

★widow[1] (wid′ō), n. [Formerly also widdow; < ME. widewe, wydewe, widwe, widue, wodewe (pl. widewen, widous), < AS. widewe, wydewe, wuduwe, widwe, wudwe, weoduwe = OS. widuwa, widowa, widwa = OFries. widwe = D. weduwe = LG. wedewe = OHG. wituwa (witawa), MHG. witewe, witwe, G. wittwe = Goth. widuwō, widowō = W. gweddw = OPruss. widdewu = OBulg. vĭdova = Russ. vdova = L. vidua (> It. vedova = Sp. viuda = Pg. viuva = Pr. veuva = F. veuve) = Pers. bīva = Skt. vidhavā, a widow; cf. Gr. ἦθεος, unmarried. The word is usually explained, from the Skt., as 'without a husband,' as if Skt. vidhavā were < vi, without, + dhava, husband; but it is more prob. derived from the root (Skt.) vindh, lack. The L. viduus, lacking, deprived of, is prob. developed from the fem. vidua, taken as adj., widowed, deprived. Similarly the words for 'widower' are derived from those for 'widow.' From L. viduus are ult. E. void, avoid, etc.] 1. A woman who has lost her husband by death. In the early church, widows formed a separate class or order, whose duties were devotion and the care of the orphans, the sick, and prisoners.

And whan the Queen and alle the othere noble Ladyes sawen that thei weren alle Wydewes, and that alle the rialle Blood was lost, thei armed hem, and, as Creatures out of Wytt, thei slowen alle the men of the Contrey that weren laft. Mandeville, Travels, p. 154.

We'll throw his castell down,
And make a widowe o' his gaye ladye.
Sang of the Outlaw Murray (Child's Ballads, VI. 23).

Widow is also used attributively (now only colloquially): as, "a widow woman," 2 Sam. xiv. 5.

How may we content

MHG. wīp, G. weib = Icel. vīf (used only in poetry) = Sw. vif = Dan. viv, woman; not found in Goth. and not traced outside of Teut.; root unknown. It cannot be connected, as commonly thought, with weave. Some compare Skt. √ vip, tremble, L. vibrare, vibrate, quiver, OHG. weibōn, waver, be inspired, be irresolute, and suppose that the word orig. meant 'something inspired' (the Germans orig. seeing in woman sanctum aliquid et providum), or that it orig. meant 'trembling,' with ref. to the timidity of a bride. Some connect it with Goth. waibjan, wind, twine, in bi-waibjan, wind about, clothe, envelop, because of a woman's 'enveloping clothing,' or because she is the 'one who binds or unites herself.' These are all vagaries. The earlier Teut. word, the one with other Indo-European cognates, is that represented by queen, quean. The neuter or inadequate significance of the word is prob. indicated also by the formation in AS. of the appar. more distinctive word wifman, whence ult. E. woman.] 1. A woman: now only in rural or provincial use, especially in Scotland, and usually with an adjective, or in composition with a noun, implying a woman of humble position: as, old wives' tales; a fish*wife*.

A wild shot, a random or chance shot.—Ethiopian wild boar. Same as halluf. See Phacochœrus.—Indian wild lime, Atalantia monophylla.—To ride the wild mare†. See ride.—To run wild. (a) To grow wild or savage; take to vicious courses or a loose way of living. (b) To escape from domestication and revert to the feral state. (c) To escape from cultivation and grow in a wild state.—To sow one's wild oats. See oat.—Wild allspice. Same as spice-bush.—Wild ananas, angelica. See the nouns.—Wild animals, those animals, and especially those beasts, which have not been reclaimed from the feral state, or domesticated for the use and benefit of man: technically called feræ naturæ.—Wild anise-tree. See anise.—Wild apricot. See apricot.—Wild ash. See ash[1].—Wild ass, any member of that section of the genus Equus to which the domestic ass belongs, except this species. There are several species or varieties, not all of which are well determined, native of northern Africa, and especially of western and central Asia. Some are very large, strong, and swift animals, which have been distinguished from remote antiquity, and were formerly hunted for sport or for their flesh. Representations of the chase of wild asses are found on Assyrian monuments, and the Hebrew words translated 'wild ass' in the Bible indicate their swift-footedness. See dziggetai and onager (with cuts) and hemione.—Wild balsam-apple, barley, basil. See the nouns.—Wild bean. See Apios and Strophostyles.—Wild bee, any bee excepting the hive-bee as domiciled by man. Both social and solitary wild bees are of very numerous species and many genera of the two families Apidæ and Andrenidæ. See these words, and also such distinctive names as bumblebee, carpenter-bee, upholsterer-bee, etc., with various cuts; also mason-bee, and cuts under Anthophora and Xylocopa.—Wild beet, Beta maritima of Europe, the supposed original of the cultivated beet; also the marsh-rosemary, Limonium Limonium.—Wild bergamot, a strongly aromatic labiate plant, Monarda fistulosa, common in dry ground in North America. The corolla is commonly purplish, an inch long.—Wild birds, those birds which are not domesticated; specifically, in Eng. law, those birds that come within the provisions of an act passed in 1880, entitled the Wild Birds Protection Act, which prohibited the taking or killing of any wild bird between certain dates of each year, with some exceptions. But the species designated in the schedule annexed to the act were but about eighty in number, thus including but a small fraction of the actual avifauna of England; and some of the commonest song-birds it was desired to protect by this act were left unspecified.—Wild boar, buckwheat. See the nouns.—Wild brier, the dogrose, Rosa canina; also, the sweet-brier, Rosa rubiginosa.—Wild camomile. Same as feverfew, 1.—Wild canary, the American goldfinch, Spinus or Chrysomitris tristis. See cut under goldfinch. [Local, U. S.]—Wild caper. Same as caper-spurge (which see, under spurge).—Wild cat. See wildcat.—Wild celery. See Vallisneria.—Wild cherry, chestnut, china-tree, cicely. See the nouns.—Wild cinnamon of the West Indies. (b) Ipomœa albivenia.—Wild dog, any feral dog, or dog in the state of nature; also, a ferine dog, or one run wild after domestication; a pariah dog; specifically, the native wild dog of Australia, Canis dingo. See Canis, Cyon[2], and cuts under buansuah, dhole, and dingo.—Wild dove, in the United States, the common Carolina dove, or mourning-dove, Zenaidura carolinensis. The implied antithesis is wild pigeon, namely, the passenger-pigeon. See cut under dove.—Wild duck, any duck excepting the domesticated duck; specifically, the wild original of the domestic duck, Anas boscas (or boschas, or boskas). See cut under mallard.—Wild elder. See elder[2].—Wild engine. (a) A locomotive running over a railway without regard to schedule time. (b) A locomotive which by some accident or derangement has escaped from the control of its driver.—Wild fig. See fig[2].—Wild flag. See Patersonia.—Wild fowl. See wild-fowl.—Wild ginger. See ginger[1].—Wild goat, any species of the genus Capra, in a broad sense, which has not been domesticated, as the ibex, etc.; specifically, the wild original of the domestic goat, C. ægagrus (see ægagrus, with cut). Several different Hebrew words rendered alike 'wild goat' in the Bible in different places are believed with good reason to mean any one of the ibexes, steinbocks, or bouquetins of Syria, Palestine, Arabia, and parts of Egypt—as, for example, the beden or jaal-goat, technically C. jaala or jaela, and as inhabiting Mount Sinai named C. sinaitica by Hemprich and Ehrenberg. These wild goats differ little from the common ibex of the Alps.—Wild goose, a bird of the goose kind, or genus Anser in a broad sense, which is wild or feral. In Great Britain the common wild goose is the graylag, Anser cinereus or ferus, and the term is applied to all the other species which visit that country. (See cut under graylag.) In North America wild goose unqualified commonly means the Canada goose, Bernicla canadensis. See cut under Bernicla.—Wild-goose chase. See chase[1].—Wild-goose plum. See plum[1].—Wild gourd. See vine of Sodom, under vine.—Wild hay, hide, honey, hyssop. See the nouns.—Wild hop, the common bryony, Bryonia dioica.—Wild horse, any specimen of the horse, Equus caballus, now living in a state of nature. See Prjevalsky's horse, in the supplement. All the wild horses of America and Australia, and probably all those of Asia, are the ferine (not truly feral) descendants of the domestic horse, which have reverted to the wild state.—Wild huntsman, a legendary huntsman, especially in Germany, who with a phantom host goes careering over woods, fields, and villages during the night, accompanied with the shouts of huntsmen and the baying of hounds.—Wild hyacinth, in the United States, the eastern camass, Quamasia hyacinthina; in England, the bluebell, Scilla nonscripta.—Wild indigo. See Amorpha and Baptisia.—Wild ipecac, ipecacuanha growing wild; also, Triosteum perfoliatum.—Wild Irishman, a rhamnaceous shrub, Discaria australis, of New Zealand and Australia, having a tortuous stem and opposite branches of which the outermost form sharp spines, the leaves small, in fascicles, absent in old plants.—Wild jalap. Same as man-of-the-earth.—Wild jasmine. See jasmine and Ixora.—Wild kale, land, lettuce, licorice, mangosteen, etc. See the nouns.—Wild lemon, the May-apple, Podophyllum peltatum: so named from the form and color of the fruit.—Wild lime. See lime[3], Limonia, and tallow-nut.—Wild mahogany, the white mahogany of Jamaica, Antirhea bifurcata.—Wild mammee-apple, the West Indian tree Rheedia laterifolia, of the Clusiaceæ.—Wild mandrake, the May-apple, Podophyllum peltatum.—Wild mango. See Spondias.—Wild mare. (a) The nightmare. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.] (b) A see-saw. Shak., 2 Hen. IV., ii. 4. 268.—Wild marjoram. See marjoram, and cut under Origanum.—Wild masterwort. Same as herb-gerard.—Wild mustard, nep, oat. See the nouns.—Wild okra. See Malachra.—Wild olive, onion, oyster. See the nouns.—Wild orange. (a) See orange. (b) The West Indian euphorbiaceous tree Drypetes glauca. (c) Sykesia vaginata (Gærtnera vaginata of Lamarck), of Réunion, without ground reported as a fit substitute for coffee: often misnamed mussænda.—Wild peach. See wild orange (b), under orange.—Wild pear, pigeon, plum, potato, etc. See the nouns.—Wild pine. (a) The Scotch pine, Pinus sylvestris. (b) In the West Indies, a plant of the genus Tillandsia, especially T. utriculata.—Wild pineapple. See pineapple, 3, penguin[2], and istle.—Wild pink. See Silene.—Wild plum or prune. See Pappea.—Wild purslane, rice, sarsaparilla, etc. See the nouns.—Wild rye. See rye and Terrell grass.—Wild sheep, the wild original of the domestic sheep, or any feral species of the genus Ovis in a broad sense. (See Ovis and sheep[1].) Various species inhabit mountains and high plateaus of Europe, Asia, Africa, and North America, as the aoudad, argali, bighorn, and burrhel, the mouflon, etc. See the distinctive names, including cuts under aoudad, argali, bighorn, and thian-shan.—Wild silkworm, any silkworm other than the ordinary domesticated Bombyx mori. A cat of the original feral stock from which have descended some varieties of the domestic cat; the European Felis catus, living in a state of nature, not artificially modified in any way. Hence—2. One of various species of either of the genera Felis and Lynx; especially, in North America, the bay lynx (L. rufus) and Canada lynx (L. canadensis), and sometimes the cougar (F. concolor). See cat[1], and cuts under cougar and lynx.

II. a. Wild; reckless; haphazard: applied especially to unsound business enterprises: as, wildcat banking (see below); wildcat currency (currency issued by a wildcat bank); a wildcat scheme (a reckless, unstable venture); wildcat stock (stock of some wildcat or unsound company or organization). [Colloq., U. S.]

The first night of our journey was spent at Ashford, in Connecticut, where we arrived late in the evening; and here the bother of wild-cat currency, as it was afterward called, was forced upon our attention.
Josiah Quincy, Figures of the Past, p. 196.

The present system, though an immense improvement in every respect on the heterogeneous old breed of State and wild-cat banks that wrought ruin in 1836 and 1857, is nevertheless of the same dangerous character.
N. A. Rev., CXLI. 199.

Wildcat banking, a name given, especially in the western United States, to the operations of organizations or individuals who, under the loose State banking-laws which prevailed before the passage of the National Bank Act of 1863, issued large amounts of bank-notes though possessing little or no capital.

The wild-cat banking which devastated the Ohio States between 1837 and 1860, and miseducated the people of those States until they thought irredeemable government issues an unhoped-for blessing, never could have existed if Story's opinion had been law.
W. G. Sumner, Andrew Jackson, p. 363.

Wildcat engine. See engine.

wildebeest (wil'de-bāst), n. [D., = E. wild beast.] The gnu. [South Africa.]

He onswared hym honestly with orryng a litill.
Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), l. 1918.

Thy will be done. Mat. vi. 10.

There is no greater Hindrance to Men for accomplishing their Will than their own Wilfulness.
Baker, Chronicles, p. 72.

That eternal immutable law in which will and reason are the same. Burke, Rev. in France.

He holds him with his glittering eye—
The wedding-guest stood still,
And listens like a three-years' child:
The Mariner hath his will.
Coleridge, Ancient Mariner, i.

Here was the will, and plenty of it; now for the way.
L. M. Alcott, Hospital Sketches, p. 4.

3. Wish; request; command.

Tell me now, Mr. Acres, in case of an accident, is there any little will or commission I could execute for you?
Sheridan, The Rivals, v. 3.

4. Expressed wish with regard to the disposal of one's property, or the like, after death; the document containing such expression of one's wishes; especially, in law, the legal declaration of a person's intentions, to take effect after his death. The essential distinction between a will and any other instrument or provision contingent upon death is that a will has no effect whatever until death, and may be freely revoked meanwhile; but a deed which may create or convey an estate in the event of death must take effect as binding the grantor in his life-time. In English law the word will was originally used only of a disposition of real property to take effect at death, the word testament being then used, as in the Roman and civil law, of a disposition of personal property; hence the phrase, now redundant, last will and testament. In modern usage the term will does not necessarily imply an actual disposition of property; for an instrument, executed with the formalities required by law, in which the testator merely appoints a guardian for his child, or merely nominates an executor, leaving the assets to be distributed by the executor among those who would take by law, is a will. In respect of form, that which distinguishes a written will from other instruments consists in the ceremonies which the law requires for a valid execution, for the sake of guarding against mistake, fraud, and undue influence. Nuncupative wills, however, are not subject to these rules. These formalities are generally four: (1) The testator must subscribe at the end or foot of the writing. (2) He must do so in the presence of witnesses. In some jurisdictions three are required. In some jurisdictions it is enough that he acknowledge to the witnesses that the subscription he has previously made is his. (3) He must at the same time publish the will — that is, declare to the witnesses that it is his will. (4) They must thereafter in his presence and at his request, and in the presence of one another, subscribe their names as witnesses. In some jurisdictions a seal is necessary with the testator's signature. One whose testimony as a subscribing witness becomes necessary to prove it can take no gift by the will.

After Christ had made his will at this supper, and given strength to his will by his death, and proved his will by his resurrection, and left the church possessed of his estate by his ascension, . . . he poured out his legacy of knowledge. Donne, Sermons, xxviii.

Her last will Shall never be digress'd from.
Ford, Broken Heart, v. 3.

O lead me gently up yon hill, . . .
And I'll there sit down, and make my will.
The Cruel Brother (Child's Ballads, II. 255).

5. Discretion; free or arbitrary disposal; sufferance; mercy.

ȝe ar welcum to welde as yow lykez,
That here is, al is yowre awen, to haue at yowre wylle & welde.
Sir Gawayne and the Green Knight (E. E. T. S.), l. 836.

Deliver me not over unto the will of mine enemies.
Ps. xxvii. 12.

The Prince was so devout and humble that he submitted his Body to be chastised at the Will of Dunstan Abbot of Glastenbury. Baker, Chronicles, p. 11.

6. The faculty of conscious, and especially of deliberate, action. The term 'will' is used in various senses in modern psychology. Playing, as it does, a most important part in ethics and metaphysics, it has been one of the last terms to free itself of the 'faculty' connotation of the older psychology: partly because, while it covers so real and palpable a portion of our mental life, it is given to introspection as a function only, and not as any specific content, over and above sensation and affection. There is no distinct will-process discoverable by analysis. The simplest internal act of will, psychologically regarded, is attention to a sense-content; the simplest external voluntary action is the impulsive action. Hence, in dealing with 'the will,' the psychologist must trace the various stages of attention (passive, active, secondary passive), and must follow the growing complexity of action, from the simple impulse to the most complicated deliberative or selective action. Since active attention and any action more complex than the impulse involve effort or conation, he will at the same time have given an analysis of this much-discussed experience. The voluntary actions of every-day life are nearly akin to emotions, differing only in the fact that they are directed upon some end and come to a sudden termination when the end is attained. The descriptive psychology of the will distinguishes various types of conative organization, as the healthy will, the explosive will, the obstructed will. By a 'strong will' is sometimes, and perhaps most correctly, meant the virtue of self-control; but more generally a certain type of mental constitution, a persistency or tenaciousness which overcomes opposition by tiring out its opponents.

Appetite is the Will's solicitor, and the Will is Appetite's controller; what we covet according to the one by the other we often reject.
Hooker, Eccles. Polity, I. viii. § 3.

7. The process of willing; the process of determining a choice or forming a purpose; volition.

Even actual sins, committed without will,
Are neither sins nor shame — much more compell'd.
Fletcher (and another), Queen of Corinth, iii. 2.

It is necessary to form a distinct notion of what is meant by the word Volition in order to understand the import of the word Will, for this last word properly expresses that power of the mind of which volition is the act. . . . The word will, however, is not always used in this its proper acceptation, but is frequently substituted for volition, as when I say that my hand moves in obedience to my will.
D. Stewart, Works (ed. Hamilton), VI. 345.

Antecedent will. See antecedent.—At will. (a†) At command; in thorough mastery.

He that can find two words of concord cannot find foure or fiue or sixe, vnlesse he haue his owne language at will.
Puttenham, Arte of Eng. Poesie, p. 73.

(b) At pleasure; at discretion. To hold an estate at the will of another is to enjoy the possession at his pleasure, and be liable to be ousted at any time by the lessor or proprietor. See estate at will, under estate.

ȝe schul wite of ȝoure sone
That ȝe long haue for-lore leue me for sothe,
